INTRODUCTION

For the fourth successive year the Conservative party performed badly in local government elections. Governing parties have become accustomed to protest voting but rarely, if ever before, has a party had to endure such deep-seated unpopularity for so long. The cumulative effect of local electoral losses sustained almost continuously since 1984 is likely to have long-term implications for the status of the Conservative party in British local government. The statistics show that the party's local government presence has been steadily evaporating. Conservative councillors have become ever more scarce - following the 1996 elections the party now has a total of just over 4,000 councillors throughout Britain, compared with more than 10,000 at the beginning of the 1980s.

Such a decline in councillor numbers has had a profound effect upon the party's visibility in some areas. There are now at least 50 councils across Great Britain, fulfilling the functions of local government for more than six million people, where not a single Conservative representative is sitting in the council chamber. In many others, including places such as Basildon which as recently as 1992 was in Conservative hands, there is but a solitary party representative. Local authorities actually run by the Conservatives are a rare species indeed, with just five out of the more than 150 principal spending authorities in Great Britain now under the party's majority control. Less visible, though no less important, is the effect of councillor losses on the party's organisational strength, particularly with a general election campaign imminent. For all parties local councillors provide a focus, a means of publicising the national party at a local level. With a reduced presence 'on the ground' the Conservative party might struggle to convey its message as well as it has done in the past.

Background

These local elections saw contests for seats in 36 metropolitan boroughs, 100 shire district councils, and one unitary council, Hartlepool. Additionally, there were elections for 'shadow' authorities in 13 new unitary councils due to assume administrative power in April 1997. These councils, comprising the areas of 14 former shire districts (Brighton and Hove is an amalgam of the two districts bearing those names) were established after recommendations of the English Local Government Commission were approved by the Secretary of State for the Environment. There were no elections for local authorities in Scotland, Wales or London. Approximately 16.7 million voters, some 40% of the British electorate, had an opportunity to vote.

The contests in 1996 were for seats last fought in 1992. That year had brought a windfall of gains for the Conservative party which only a month previously had secured its fourth consecutive general election victory. In those authorities which had remained structurally unchanged the Conservatives were defending 267 seats in the metropolitan boroughs and 765 seats in the shire districts. Labour, traditionally stronger in the cities, was defending 443 seats in the metropolitan boroughs and 397 in the shires. Liberal Democrat strength was greater in the districts where they had won 235 seats in 1992 against only 97 in the metropolitan councils.

Estimating the number of seats each party was defending in the 13 new unitary councils proved more difficult. Some of the former districts had held partial elections with a proportion of the council being elected in 1992, 1994 and 1995. In the remaining authorities elections had been of the whole council and had last taken place in 1995. There were two basic methods for addressing this issue of electoral timing. One method, favoured by the Press Association and the Conservative party itself, was to ignore the elections in the unitary councils for the purposes of compiling seat totals, and gains and losses, for the respective parties. That method also took into account changes in seat control because of by-elections since 1992. The net effect was to reduce considerably the total number of seats which the Conservative party appeared to be defending in 1996. Another method, and the one adopted by ourselves, was simply to take the existing political composition of the old district, regardless of when those councillors were elected, and to assume that to reflect the pre-election state of the parties in the new unitaries.

Overall, adoption of this second method meant that in 1996 the Conservatives had to defend 1,166 seats, Labour 1,188 and the Liberal Democrats 436. Independents and other parties accounted for a further 130 seats. In one unitary authority, Milton Keynes, the introduction of new ward boundaries meant it was impossible to provide seat estimates.

Conservative seats were always likely to be vulnerable simply because the party was defending those won during its brief general election honeymoon. A Conservative general election share of the vote of 43% in April 1992 increased to a national equivalent vote of some 47% a month later in May. Labour's support fell in the same period from 35% to 32%. On the strength of this support Conservative candidates won seats in areas which had not favoured the party for some substantial time. By 1996, however, the position of the two main parties had been reversed, while the Liberal Democrats had also seen their position in local government improve. With such marked changes of fortune the Conservatives were bound to suffer losses. Given the swing away from the party since 1992 Conservative candidates realised that even wards with majorities of about 20% could not be considered 'safe'.

How many council seats could the Conservatives lose without the party suffering further national humiliation? Less than 250 losses would in effect mean the Conservatives were as popular as they had been at the time of the last general election. Losses of 500 seats would indicate the party was in much better health than a year before when it had suffered its worst ever election defeat. Up to 650 Conservative seat losses would suggest the party's recovery was, at best, sluggish.

The Results

Table 1 shows the extent to which, once again, Conservative candidates fared badly at the polls. In the metropolitan boroughs, for example, the party's tally of seats fell to 72 from the 267 won in 1992 while its average vote share in seats contested declined from 37% to just 22%. In these authorities Labour support rose dramatically, with the party obtaining an absolute majority of the votes cast. The electoral system's capacity to over reward the largest party was evidenced by Labour's 75% share of seats across these authorities. The Liberal Democrat vote also rose, by 3% to 20%, compared with 1992 and the party won 126 seats, an increase of 29. A notable first was achieved by the Greens who won their first ever seat, Newsome ward in Kirklees, in the metropolitan boroughs.

The collapse in the Conservative vote extended to the shire districts and the new unitary councils. Direct comparisons with 1992 are difficult because of boundary and structural changes but it is worth noting that the average vote share for Conservative candidates fell from 46% in 1992 to just 31% in the district authorities - a decline virtually identical with the Conservative collapse in the metropolitan areas. The principal beneficiary of this decline was Labour whose overall vote rose to 42% with the party's candidates winning more than half the seats they contested. Although the Liberal Democrats could not match Labour's progress the party raised its vote by 3% overall compared with four years before while the average vote per candidate was only marginally less than the equivalent figure for Conservative candidates. Indeed, despite polling a smaller popular vote than the Conservatives, the Liberal Democrats succeeded in winning more seats in the metropolitan as well as district and unitary council elections - revealing the continuing effectiveness of their strategy of concentrating party resources on winnable seats instead of needlessly accumulating votes.

As Table 2 shows the Conservatives suffered a damaging net loss of 683 council seats, more than half the total being defended. Labour made more than 500 gains while the Liberal Democrats' own pre-election prediction of 50-100 net gains proved somewhat pessimistic. The large majority of Labour gains were at the expense of the Conservatives although the party did win 50 seats from the Liberal Democrats.

Table 3 explores further the nature of Conservative decline by examining the change in vote share in those seats lost by the party. The reduced number of cases reflects the impact of structural changes and the need to control for similar patterns of party competition. The figures reveal first that, compared with all three party contests, the Conservative vote fell more in those seats which it lost to its main rivals. As in previous years swing was far from uniform. Second, the rise in the Labour vote was one and half times greater in seats which it captured from the Conservatives than overall. Moreover, when the increase in the Labour vote in its successful seats is compared with the rise in party support in those Conservative seats captured instead by the Liberal Democrats the difference is more than twice as great.

So effective was the Labour squeeze that in seats won from the Conservatives in the districts the Liberal Democrat vote also fell by an average of 0.6%. The differences in the Liberal Democrat vote are even more dramatic. Overall, the Liberal Democrat vote rose by an average of between 3.2-3.5% but in those seats the party won from the Conservatives their vote increased by 17.1% in the metropolitan areas and 14.4% in the districts. Such figures give further weight to the argument that in recent local elections the Conservative party has been effectively caught in a pincer movement, losing seats to whichever opposition party is best able to capitalise. Labour and Liberal Democrat local parties alike have clearly employed more efficient campaigning strategies, identifying Conservative seats most likely to fall and persuading electors to take their cue from such campaigns.

Despite such a large-scale movement of seats few councils changed political control. This was for a variety of reasons. First, the fact that in most cases only a proportion of each council's seats were being contested meant that shifts in electoral opinion would not impact greatly on council composition. Second, the Conservatives had already seen council control considerably reduced by earlier election disasters and, in truth, there was very little left for them to lose. Just four Conservative councils were at stake; Macclesfield, Broxbourne, Runnymede and Huntingdonshire. Beforehand the party knew that any losses from this short list, particularly with Huntingdonshire providing the Prime Minister's own constituency base, would result in a considerable amount of media attention. Party managers were relieved, therefore, when only Runnymede was lost but even here the party has sought to continue running the administration courtesy of the mayor's casting vote. Both Labour and the Liberal Democrats drew from the stock of councils with no overall control in order to extend their grip on local government. Labour took power in authorities such as Cherwell, Hertsmere, North Hertfordshire and Trafford where the party had never before experienced majority control. In once true-blue Tunbridge Wells, Woking and Wokingham the Liberal Democrats now have political control.

Turnout, Contestation and Women candidates in 1996

One disappointing feature of the elections was the generally low level of turnout. Across the metropolitan boroughs turnout averaged just over 30% - down almost 9% compared with 1995 and the lowest figure recorded for these authorities since reorganisation in the early 1970s. A similar level of electoral apathy affected the contests in the shires although direct comparisons with previous years is difficult because of the establishment of the unitary authorities. Nevertheless, with just 37% of electors bothering to vote in the shire districts this too represented the lowest rate of participation at any election since 1973 for these authorities. In the new unitary authorities roughly two in three electors chose to abstain from the inaugural elections. In Stoke on Trent, for example, turnout was little more than 20% - hardly a ringing democratic endorsement to usher in a new era of local government. Overall, a total of 29 out of the 150 authorities holding elections had turnouts of less than 30%.

Electoral apathy was one explanation offered by the Conservative party for its disappointing performance and the reason why so many seats were lost. It is difficult fully to test this argument, but the evidence suggests that low turnout would only be a minor factor in accounting for Conservative losses. In those district seats where comparisons with the equivalent elections in 1992 could be made turnout fell by an average of 2.6%. Controlling for the incumbent party in 1992 we find that turnout fell least in Conservative seats (-1.0%) and most in Liberal Democrat ones (-4.8%). In Labour seats the decline in turnout was in line with the overall average. When the data were examined in more detail it was found that turnout fell by an average of -2.3% in seats lost by the Conservatives but in those where the party successfully defended the seat turnout actually rose by 0.7%. Such figures do give some credence to the explanation offered by the Conservatives that the party lost seats because some of its supporters may have abstained from voting. It should be said, however, that it is easy to exaggerate the effect. The difference in turnout between seats held and lost is not sufficient in itself to explain why the Conservatives lost seats where the average majority in 1992 was 18%.

Table 5 : Turnout, uncontested seats and women candidates in 1996 local elections

Metropolitan Boroughs

average turnout 34.6	wards uncontested 3	Three party contest 226
Number candidates 1931	Women candidates 527 (27.2)	Women elected 161 (24.5)

The low turnout was in spite of the fact that the competition for council seats continued to be buoyant. In the metropolitan authorities the ratio of candidates to seats was 3.1, while in the district authorities it was 2.9. In the new unitaries with multiple member ward elections some local parties may have struggled to find sufficient numbers of candidates but, nevertheless, the ratio of 2.9 candidates per seat matched that found in the districts. Three party contests took place in 70% of wards in the metropolitan and district councils but in the unitary authorities no less than 83% of wards gave electors the opportunity to support one or other of the main parties. Certainly local parties appear to have perceived these particular contests as a crucial opportunity to build a council presence, but Labour's dominance was such that it won overall control in 10 out of the 13 authorities electing their entire membership.

Both the level of contestation and extent of success enjoyed by women candidates showed a small improvement when compared with previous years' contests. Women candidates accounted for 28.9% of total candidatures in the metropolitan authorities, some 1.5% higher than in 1995 and 2% more than in the equivalent electoral cycle of 1992. Similarly, the number of women elected in the metropolitan areas increased to a record high of 26.6%. Traditionally, the more urban authorities have lagged slightly behind those with a suburban or rural base and that pattern continues. The predominantly urban unitary authorities, for example, saw fewer women candidates and fewer women elected than in the district authorities. Although only a quarter of councillors in the unitary authorities will be women this figure remains substantially higher than the 10% of women M.P.s in the current House of Commons.

The National Picture

It was widely recognised that these elections would almost certainly be the last before the general election. Given the context it was unsurprising to find a higher than usual interest in interpreting the national picture from local results. The most effective method for doing this is to construct a 'national equivalent vote' measure. Essentially, this seeks to overcome the problem that local elections rarely cover the entire country and, indeed, that they may take place in areas which are electorally more favourable to one particular party. The national equivalent vote compensates for such bias and in effect gives an estimate of the share of the vote which each of the three main parties would have obtained if elections had been held throughout Great Britain.

In 1996 the Conservative national equivalent vote share of 28% was only three points higher than the party had achieved 1995. Labour obtained 44% while the Liberal Democrats were in third place on 23%. As Figure 1 shows, the Conservatives have failed to recover from the dramatic fall in their support which began in the autumn of 1992 after the undignified exit from the European Exchange Rate Mechanism. For its part Labour polled a national equivalent vote of at least 40% for the fourth year running and while its support was down compared with 1995, the party's performance was better than at any time during the last parliament. The Liberal Democrat vote remained virtually static but, as we have shown, the party has now begun effectively to exploit, rather than be exploited by, the electoral system.

An added dimension to the now customary process of aggregating votes into parliamentary constituencies was that parliament has accepted the proposals of the various Boundary Commissions. It was possible, therefore, to study the pattern of local voting in the new, rather than the old, constituencies. Some interesting differences, most notably variations in behaviour within Conservative held constituencies, were in evidence. In Gillingham and Slough, for example, the Conservative vote collapsed by more than 25% compared with the last general election. Slough now has the distinction, along with just a handful of others, of being a constituency which elected a Conservative MP in 1992 but where the main local authority in the constituency now no longer has any Conservative councillors. Similarly, 'Essex voter', once the staunchest of Conservative supporters, has apparently deserted the party. The constituencies of Billericay, Basildon, Colchester and Southend West all registered a Conservative vote decline of around 20% or more.

The news in other constituencies was not all bad for the Conservatives. Overall, comparisons with the 1992 general election indicated a drop of 15% in Conservative support with increases of 9% for Labour and 5% for the Liberal Democrats. Some constituencies, however, showed much smaller changes. The Midlands contains a disproportionate number of Conservative marginals and the opposition parties will be concerned that in some of those the Conservative vote held up remarkably well. Across Birmingham, for example, Conservative voters stayed fairly loyal with the party's vote falling just 1.5% compared with the general election in the Labour target seat of Edgbaston. Similarly, had this been a general election the Conservatives would have just held on to the key seat of Wolverhampton South West. In the context of a national Conservative to Labour swing of 12% such variations in the behaviour of marginal constituencies will be of great interest to the parties as they prepare strategies to fight the general election.

Conclusions

The 1996 local elections saw the electoral pattern established in recent years continued. The Conservatives suffered heavier losses than expected had uniform swing operated. The swing in Conservative seats lost to Labour averaged 21%, approximately 6% higher than the overall swing between the two parties. A similar picture emerged from the Conservatives' battle with the Liberal Democrats with swing again being 6% higher in seats lost than overall. These figures suggest that the Conservatives have become extremely vulnerable to a highly effective two-pronged attack from the opposition parties. This is not to imply that local Labour and Liberal Democrat parties have deliberately planned this onslaught; very few cases emerged prior to these elections of local pacts struck between the parties. We suspect, however, that the Conservatives have become victim to a more informed process of campaigning whereby both Labour and Liberal Democrats focus their resources in key wards and thereby experience larger than average swings in their favour. This strategy has been a key feature of recent local elections and were it to be repeated as successfully at the next general election it could have dramatic consequences.

Whatever the outcome of the general election the Conservative party faces a bleak future in local government. In the short term the party could benefit considerably by calling the general election day for May 1st 1997. This would mean holding the election simultaneously with the county elections. When these seats were last contested in 1993 the Conservative party achieved just 31% of the national equivalent vote and in the process lost political control of county councils, some of which had been in the party's possession since the late nineteenth century. Assuming the party polls better than it did in 1993 this would have the effect of restoring Conservative strength in the shires, although it is doubtful whether the party will be as dominant as it once was. In fact, the long period in government has brought a sustained diminution of Conservative councillors. Over the four parliaments since the party came to power in 1979 both the level and duration of Conservative unpopularity has been in evidence. This, coupled with improvements in opposition party campaigning tactics discussed above, has seen the Conservatives driven back in large parts of the country. The nature of the local electoral cycle is such that the party will not recover its former status quickly.

The fate of the Conservative party, however, is of less significance than the level of turnout for the 1996 elections. The record level of electoral disinterest is a matter which should concern all, irrespective of party allegiance, who value the qualities inherent in a democratic system of local government. When so few electors vote the credibility of local councillors and council administrations alike is called into question. It is always difficult to pronounce on one set of elections. The low turnout in 1996 might have been a singular occurrence or it might form the start of a trend. Some have argued that low turnout is not at all surprising given what has happened to the power of local authorities in recent years. Others have complained that local elections have become dominated by the national parties and have ceased to reflect local concerns. Whatever the merits of these and other arguments, it is clear that the issue of low turnout is one that should be addressed immediately by everyone concerned with the future health of local democracy in Britain.

USING THE HANDBOOK

The structure of local government has, once again, undergone substantial changes since last year and this is reflected in the organisation of this year's local election handbook. Further changes were implemented for parts of the local government system in England involving the creation of 13 new unitary councils. Shadow elections for the new authorities were held in May with another unitary authority, Hartlepool, also re-electing a third of its council members. This year's handbook, therefore, is organised into three main sections dealing with elections for the metropolitan boroughs, English shire districts and unitary authorities respectively. Election results have generally been taken from figures provided by and checked with local Electoral Administrators.

Before the ward by ward results we have provided a section of aggregate data covering the 36 metropolitan boroughs, 100 English shire districts and 14 unitary authorities. The ward results for each authority have been aggregated to produce a set of summary statistics. These include the percentage vote share for a range of parties. Where wards elect more than one councillor then the vote of the best placed candidate for each party is used in calculating total vote. In the cases of Independent candidates these were grouped according to the number of seats in a ward. In the case of a three-member ward with six Independent candidates, therefore, the votes of the first and fourth placed Independent would contribute towards the total vote figure. The number of seats contested and the number of seats won by each party is also noted. Turnout, in brackets after the name of the authority, is the average turnout in those wards which had a contested election. In those authorities where a direct comparison with the 1992 elections has been possible we have also provided the percentage change for the different parties. This figure does not control for varying patterns of party contestation, however, and interested readers should consult directly the 1992 Local Elections Handbook for such information.

The results for each ward are listed in alphabetical order within their authorities. The figure in brackets is the electorate for 1996. The practice adopted by local authorities for calculating this figure varies - in some cases it includes all names on the 1996 register, in others it is a more accurate record of only those entitled to vote on election day in May. It has been impossible to adopt a standard definition of electorate or reliably to identify the particular procedures used by each authority. The appearance of a date in [square brackets] on this line indicates that the election was not held for some reason on May 2nd but was contested on the later, specified date.

This year there were a number of wards, listed below, where the actual election was held not on the prescribed date but rather on a subsequent date. In each case we have provided a full election result together with the date of the election.

Wards where the election was postponed.

1. Coventry - Foleshill ward.
2. St. Albans - Sopwell ward.

Candidates are listed in descending order of vote. The first initial is given; 'Ms' after a candidate's name indicates a woman; and '*' indicates that the candidate was a sitting councillor. In the cases of the new unitary authorities a * indicates a sitting councillor on the associated district authority. Candidates whose names appear in bold are those elected. Vote is the number of electors who supported each candidate and Share the proportion of the total number who cast a valid ballot supporting each candidate. In the case of multi-member wards we have used the vote of each party's best placed candidate in order to calculate total vote. Where a candidate(s) was returned unopposed this is noted and turnout recorded as '0.0'. Below the list of candidates, votes and shares is a line of data detailing first, the result at the corresponding election in 1992, then the turnout and the percentage majority in 1996. In some cases the result field for 1992 will be missing because no equivalent election was held. In addition to the new unitary authorities there are some authorities which have undergone minor boundary changes within the last four years and comparison with 1992 is no longer appropriate. Turnout is the proportion of the electorate given for the ward who cast valid ballots. In the overwhelming majority of cases of multi-member wards the turnout is that given by the local election office and has thus been calculated knowing the number of valid ballot papers issued. The figure to the right of the turnout represents the lead of the winning party over the second placed party in percentage terms rounded to one decimal place.

Candidates who stand for local election use an extensive variety of party labels and we have felt obliged to reduce these to manageable numbers. Unless the party label included the word 'Independent' we have treated such candidates as if they were official party candidates. It was necessary to bring together a large number of candidates under the general heading of 'Independents' In a few cases there were sufficient of these within a single authority to justify using the label in its own right, an example of which appears in Manchester with a group fighting under the banner of 'Fresh Air Now' (FAN).
