Introduction

Forecasting and interpreting the results of this year's local elections was complicated by widespread boundary changes, resulting, in many cases, in the need for whole-council elections. Indeed, this led to the almost farcical situation of rival politicians comparing the outcome in 2002 with different base years. Naturally, the year chosen was the one that presented their own party in the best possible light. The headline figures, shown in Table 1, show that there were elections for 5,914 seats in 3,342 wards across 174 councils in England. However, 4,031 seats in 1,596 wards in 84 local authorities were fought on new boundaries. Here, only estimates could be made about which party would have 'won' the previous election had the ward been in existence. Boundaries were unchanged in the remaining 1,746 wards but there were other complications. Although a majority (1,128 or 65%) of these wards followed the customary four-year electoral cycle, a large number did not. In fact, 463 wards were last fought in 1999, 138 in 2000, and the remaining 17 wards contested as recently as general election day 2001. Well-briefed politicians applied the best possible gloss to the results, confirming in the public's mind that their elected representatives sometimes hide behind lies, damned lies and statistics.

What can be stated with a degree of authority is that Labour won 2,400 seats, over 40% of the total, and four hundred seats more than the Conservatives. The Conservatives' share of seats, just over two thousand in all, was 34%, slightly better than the party's share of votes. In fact, for the main parties the ratio between votes and seats was more or less equitable, with the Liberal Democrats capturing 21% of seats with slightly less than 24% of the vote. The high proportion of wards fought by each of the three main parties reflects the urban nature of many of the wards with contests in 2002.

Table 1 breaks down the results into four different types of local authority, viz., London and Metropolitan boroughs, Unitary and Shire District councils. The election across the 32 London boroughs was extremely close between Conservative and Labour parties, with just one tenth of one percentage point separating their respective vote totals. Interestingly, Labour's haul of 865 seats was considerably more than the 655 seats won by the Conservatives. This disparity was despite the widespread boundary changes throughout London that saw a reduction in the number of wards (reduced to 624 from 759 in 1998) but less of a reduction in the total number of seats (reduced to 1,861 from 1,917), as the Local Government Electoral Commission continued its preference for three-member wards. Boundary changes, however, do not prevent direct comparisons with the pattern of aggregate voting at the previous elections held in 1998. Compared with then the vote share for the Conservatives rose by 2.2% while Labour's declined by six and a half percentage points – a Labour to Conservative swing of just over 4%. This was hardly the level of progress that the Conservatives were anticipating during Labour's second parliamentary term. The Liberal Democrat vote was virtually unchanged but the Green vote almost doubled to 5.5%, reflecting that party's ambitions for the next London Assembly elections scheduled for 2004.

The battle for votes and seats in the 36 Metropolitan boroughs was certainly not as even as Labour continues to be dominant in a majority of these authorities. Labour's vote of 43% was almost three percentage points lower than in 1998 but the party's share of seats remained high at 63%. By contrast, the Conservatives continue to struggle to make much of an impression amongst voters in the Metropolitan boroughs. Furthermore, its vote is poorly distributed. Despite capturing more than one in four votes cast the party could only manage 133 seats, 16% of the total. Comparing that with the respective vote and seat shares for the Liberal Democrats (23% and 18%) demonstrates the extent to which the Conservatives suffer from the consequences of electoral bias. But as the boundary reviews in the London boroughs show, it is not simply a matter of establishing electoral equality amongst wards but rather how each party's vote is distributed that holds the key to the Conservatives' current dilemma.

Comparisons with previous elections for the Unitary and District councils are practically impossible, except at the level of a fraction of local authorities and wards where boundaries remained unchanged. What can easily be observed, however, is further confirmation of the Conservative party's apparent inability fully to come to terms with its reduced status in the eyes of voters and the impact this is having on the proportion of seats the party succeeds in winning. In the 18 Unitary authorities, for example, Labour held just a five-point vote share advantage over the Conservatives but there was a two to one division in seats in Labour's favour (44% compared with 22%). Even in the District councils, which traditionally favour the Conservatives, the party hardly achieves the so-called 'winner's bonus' in seats. In fact, the outcome in these particular authorities was remarkably proportional with vote and seat shares varying between one and three percentage points for every party group.

Party performance and political control

No fewer than 40 councils changed political control, almost a quarter of the total, illustrative of the heightened degree of electoral volatility in recent years – see Table 2. The direction of change, though not exclusive, was often against the incumbent party, Labour, Liberal Democrat and even Conservative. In many authorities there was significant support for minor parties and Independents. Because of boundary changes estimates were made beforehand of which party would have won newly created wards had these been in existence in 1998. Based on these estimates we calculate that the Conservatives made net gains of approximately 248 seats, with Labour incurring net losses of 278 seats. The Liberal Democrats, defying their lowly opinion poll ratings, succeeded in making 49 net gains. Although the Conservatives could overtake Labour as the largest party in local government at next year's elections, their rate of progress towards this particular goal has been painfully slow.

Labour can feel reasonably content regarding changes in council control, particularly since the elections followed so closely on a tax-raising budget. It lost control in 12 councils, but gained four others. Three-quarters of Labour's lost councils went to 'no overall control', whilst two of its four gains were the former Conservative controlled, and neighbouring councils of Hyndburn and Rossendale in Lancashire.

Nevertheless, there were some surprises among Labour's losses. Normally secure for Labour, Kingston upon Hull has now fallen victim to a phenomenon seen elsewhere: Liberal Democrats successfully squeezing Labour and Conservative support alike. A similar fate awaited Labour in Norwich, a council selected by the Liberal Democrats as their number one target. Labour also lost majorities in Enfield and Welwyn Hatfield, but here it was the Conservatives who took advantage. There was an 11% swing from Labour to Conservative in Enfield but elsewhere in the capital political fortunes fluctuated. In both Bexley and Croydon, Labour won the council despite polling fewer votes than the Conservatives and suffering an adverse swing since the last elections in 1998. The Liberal Democrats strengthened their grip in Islington but fell short in Southwark. In the west the contrast was even sharper, the Liberal Democrats finally losing control in Richmond upon Thames whilst simultaneously restoring their majority in neighbouring Kingston upon Thames.

In other parts of southern England the Liberal Democrats polled well, especially in Cheltenham, Eastbourne and Worthing, all of which were gained from the Conservatives courtesy of a tactical squeeze on Labour's vote. But these successes contrast sharply with the Liberal Democrats' retreat in parts of northern England. Both vote share and majority control was lost in Oldham and Sheffield as well as in the more genteel setting of Harrogate. In Oldham and Harrogate the party's vote fell only marginally but in Sheffield it collapsed by 14 percentage points as Labour recovered after several years of losses. Northern England largely remains a Labour/Liberal Democrat battleground, especially now that the Conservatives have lost control of Calderdale, gained as recently as the 2000 elections. Perhaps the most surprising statistic is that in cities such as Liverpool, Manchester and Newcastle, there are still no Conservative councillors.

It was the British Nationalist Party (BNP) that successfully appropriated newspaper column inches and broadcast coverage following its decision to target seats in Burnley, scene of race riots the previous summer. Three of the party's candidates were successful, the first BNP councillors elected since 1993. Turnout in Burnley reached 53%, reflecting no doubt both media interest and the intensity of the local campaigns. In nearby Oldham, also targeted by the party, turnout rose to 44%, although here the party's candidates were unable to secure any seats, despite winning an average vote share of 27%. Where BNP candidates contested the local elections their vote share averaged 17% overall.

Green candidates, averaging less than a 10% vote share, won seats in Bassetlaw, Lewisham, and Leeds but lost ground elsewhere, especially in Oxford. In Elmbridge the Residents' group gained the required number of seats to give it overall control while in Wyre Forest the councillors representing the Kidderminster Hospital and Health Concern group now form a majority administration.

Electoral turnout

Overall, as Table 3 shows, only one in three of eligible electors voted. In comparison with 1998 the turnout in London was lower by some three percentage points on average but there was a seven-point rise in the Metropolitan boroughs. Seeking to arrest the fall in turnout, the government approved further pilot schemes in 30 local authorities. Some modifications would have been barely noticeable to the majority of electors. For example, two London boroughs, Wandsworth and Westminster, extended the hours that polling stations were open, whilst other authorities gave electors an opportunity to vote some days prior to the normal Thursday. There was little or no measurable effect from these experiments, indeed in Wandsworth there was a large decline in turnout. More ambitious schemes saw some councils dispense with the need for polling stations, holding all-postal ballots instead. A popular choice among piloting authorities was e(lectronic)-voting, although the format varied. In some areas voters visited a polling station and used a touch screen voting facility. Others permitted voting by telephone, conventional or mobile, as well as via the Internet.

As in 2000, when the first electoral pilots were held, the only real success story can be found with all-postal ballots. In Chorley, Gateshead, Stevenage and South Tyneside, turnout doubled compared with 1998 and in every other case except Hackney, where a complex ballot arrangement was used, it rose substantially. The impact of e-voting on turnout is more ambiguous. On the one hand the aggregate level did not rise significantly, and it does not appear that such schemes persuaded many additional electors to vote. In Swindon, for example, where e-voting took place across all wards, overall turnout rose from 29% in 2000 to 31% in 2002, more or less in line with the national increase. In the country as a whole, nearly half the 28 wards where Internet voting was offered saw fewer than 10% of voters favour this method. However, in some wards relatively large numbers of voters did take advantage of the new opportunities. Seven wards saw voting by Internet by more than one in five voters, with the highest proportion, 29%, located in the Verulam ward in St. Albans. Telephone voting too received a mixed reaction. Across 19 wards in Swindon between 4-6% of voters voted in this manner, but in two wards in Liverpool the proportion was higher, 17-18%, and in Verulam almost three in ten voters used the telephone to cast a ballot. This ward perhaps best summarises attitudes towards voting – some electors will embrace change whilst others will not. While over half voted either by Internet or telephone and a further 9% voted by post, just over a third of electors still chose to visit their local polling station. A survey of Internet voters in Swindon found, perhaps unsurprisingly, that it was younger voters who took greatest advantage of the new technology.

Contestation, Women candidates and Incumbents

It was certainly not a lack of competition that discouraged many from voting. As the figures show (see Table 3), there were only a very small number of cases where candidates were elected unopposed. In London there was no contest in the Hounslow Heath ward while Wigan's Bedford-Astley was the only Metropolitan borough ward not to feature a challenge. The appropriately named Wokingham Without ward was the only case of an unopposed return in the Unitary council elections.

With elections occurring in the London boroughs it was to be anticipated that the level of three-party competition was going to be high. Overall, seven in ten ward contests offered electors a choice of candidates from the main parties, with the proportion highest in London and lowest in the shires. The addition of Independents, Greens and other minor parties brought the total number of candidates towards eighteen thousand. Across the board there was a healthy ratio of candidates to seats, highest in the Metropolitan boroughs (3.47), falling to a ratio of 2.69 in the District council elections.

The relatively large proportion of women that contested seats complements the competitive nature of the elections. In most local elections the percentage of female candidates rarely rises as high as 30% but in London and the shire Districts the ratio in 2002 was one in three and high too for the other authorities. Among the main parties the Liberal Democrats had the largest share of female candidates, some 37%. Voters showed no discrimination for or against female candidates.

In 3,761 seats from the 5,914 available an incumbent councillor was re-elected. Almost 88% of Conservative incumbents seeking re-election were successful but even amongst Labour and Liberal Democrats the percentage rose above 80%. Naturally, the extensive boundary changes meant that many of these councillors are now representing at least some new electors but the general rule of thumb remains that as long as councillors do not voluntarily retire from the council then they have a good chance of electoral success. Approximately 60% of councillors elected in 2002 for each of the main parties were individuals standing for re-election.

Mayoral elections

Following referendum votes approving the principle of an elected mayor some seven contests were held in May 2002. The results of these elections are shown in Table 4. The system of voting used to elect mayors is known as the Supplementary Vote (SV), which gives each voter a first and second vote. Should no candidate win an absolute majority of first votes then all but the two top-placed candidates are eliminated and, where eligible, the second votes on those ballots are added to the totals of the two remaining candidates. The winner is the candidate with the most votes following this procedure. Of the seven mayoral elections just two contests, in Middlesbrough and Newham, saw the successful candidate win after the first ballot. In none of the remaining five contests was the candidate leading after the first vote count overtaken by his or her opponent on the second count. An absolute majority of votes was achieved by only two of the five candidates elected following the counting of second votes (Lewisham and Watford).

Two contests in particular received widespread publicity and, at the same time, appeared to confirm the public's current scepticism towards traditional party politics. In Middlesbrough, the former policeman Ray Mallon won easily as an Independent candidate, polling almost two-thirds of votes cast. The mayoral race in Hartlepool was won by Stuart Drummond, better known locally as Hartlepool Town's football mascot, "H'Angus the Monkey", who despite wearing fancy dress throughout the campaign resisted the challenge of his party political opponents. Other results too were unexpected. In Watford, the winner was Liberal Democrat, Dorothy Thornhill, who only narrowly missed winning on the first count. Ironically, she had first opposed the policy of an elected mayor, arguing that it put too much power in the hands of a single person. Meanwhile, politics in Labour-run North Tyneside council is also set to become more interesting now that the voters there have elected a Conservative mayor. A further four referendums (Bedford, Hackney, Mansfield and Stoke on Trent) have endorsed the mayoral principle and elections will be held shortly in these authorities. Did the mayoral elections encourage more people to vote? While in both Middlesbrough and North Tyneside the availability of a postal vote helped to persuade more than four in ten electors to participate, in four of the five other mayoral contests turnout fell below 30%.

Using the Handbook

In 2002 there were elections for a total of 174 local authorities comprising 32 London boroughs, 36 Metropolitan boroughs, 18 Unitary councils and 88 District councils. There were no local elections in Scotland and Wales, the English shire Counties, as well as those Districts that normally hold whole-council elections. The Handbook is organised into sections, which cover the London, Metropolitan, Unitary and District councils respectively. Within these categories councils are organised alphabetically and results are reported in alphabetical order of ward name. Election results have generally been taken from figures provided by, and checked with, Electoral Administrators.

Before the ward by ward results we have provided a section containing aggregate data covering each local authority. Ward results for each authority were aggregated to produce this set of summary statistics. These include the percentage vote share for a range of parties and independent candidates. Where wards elect more than one councillor then the vote of the best placed candidate for each party is used in calculating total vote. In contests featuring multiple Independent candidates these were grouped according to the number of seats in a ward. In the case of a three-member ward with six Independent candidates, therefore, the votes of the first and fourth placed Independent contribute towards the total vote figure. The number of seats contested and the number of seats won by each party is also noted.

Turnout, in brackets after the name of the authority, is the average turnout in those wards which had a contested election. Table 3A at the rear of the book contains details of local authority turnout that has been calculated using a different method. Instead of taking the average value in contested wards we have summed the votes and electorates in contested wards and then expressed one as a percentage of the other. These two methods for calculating local authority level turnout will produce slightly different figures for those authorities that have a large range of ward level electorates and where complex patterns of contestation in multi-member wards result in an under- or over-estimate of actual votes cast.

In those authorities where a direct comparison with the 1998 elections has been possible we have also provided the percentage change for the different parties. In a large number of cases this has not proved practicable. Some of the councils have a different base year and we felt that comparisons might prove misleading. Furthermore, a large number of authorities have seen boundary changes recently implemented and had whole-council elections this year as opposed to ‘thirds’ elections in 1998. In those cases where comparisons have been made between a party’s vote in 2002 and 1998 we have not controlled for varying patterns of party competition. Interested readers should consult the relevant year’s Handbook for such detailed information.

The final two lines of the summary of aggregate statistics provide information relating to the number of candidates fielded by each party as well as the number of candidates that were successfully elected. Note, that since some councils are electing only a fraction of the council body (e.g. Metropolitan boroughs and some Unitary and District councils) the 'seats won' category is not an equivalent to the full council composition.

In the main body of the book the results for each ward are listed in alphabetical order within each local authority. The figure in brackets is the electorate for 2002. The practice adopted by local authorities for calculating this figure varies but the introduction of rolling electoral registers means that it is likely to be is a better approximation than before of the numbers eligible to vote on election day. Nevertheless, it has been impossible to adopt a standard definition of electorate or reliably to identify the particular procedures used by each authority. The appearance of a date in [square brackets] on this line indicates that the election was not held for some reason on May 2 but was contested on the later, specified date. This year there were four such contests, viz., Brent (Northwick Park), Newcastle-under-Lyme (Thistlebury), Stoke-on-Trent (Northwood & Birches Head), and Wyre Forest (Sutton Park). All of these elections were held on June 13 but their results have been incorporated into the aggregate statistics.

Candidates are listed in descending order of vote within each ward. The first initial is given; 'Ms.' after a candidate's name indicates a woman; and '*' indicates that the candidate was a sitting councillor, although not necessarily for the same ward. Vote is the number of electors who supported each candidate and Share the proportion of the total number who cast a valid ballot supporting each candidate. The process of rounding means that some shares do not necessarily sum to 100.

In the case of multi-member wards where more than one vacancy was filled we have used the vote of each party's best placed candidate in order to calculate total vote and hence party shares. Where a candidate(s) was returned unopposed then either '0' or '0.0' are used in the fields for vote, share and turnout.

Below the list of candidates is a further line of data. First, we print the name of the party whose candidate finished top of the poll at the corresponding election in 1998 (or later in some authorities where new boundaries have taken effect). In many local authorities recent ward boundary changes have meant that it has not always been possible to indicate a winning party at the previous election. In multi-member wards it is important not to assume that the named party won all the available seats in that ward; so-called 'split-wards' where seats are shared between parties are fairly common. Next, is recorded the percentage turnout. Turnout is the proportion of the electorate that cast valid ballots at the election. In the overwhelming majority of cases turnout is that given by the local Electoral Administrator and has thus been calculated knowing the number of valid ballot papers issued. In the remaining cases we have ourselves calculated turnout from the available information. The figure to the right of the turnout represents the lead of the winning party over the second placed party in percentage terms rounded to one decimal place. The process of rounding means that in some cases the percentage majority may not be exactly the same as the winning party's vote share minus the second-placed party's share.

Party Labels

Candidates standing for local election use an extensive variety of party labels that now have to be officially registered with the Electoral Commission. However, we have felt obliged to reduce these to manageable numbers. To provide an example the Waltham Residents' Association is listed simply as 'Res', in common with other similar Associations. Unless the party label included the word 'Independent' we have treated such candidates as if they were official party candidates. It was necessary to bring together a large number of candidates under the general heading of 'Independents'. In some cases we have retained the labels used by specific local parties when the number of candidates fielded has warranted it. A list of party labels follows:

* Electorate excludes any wards where there was no contest in 2002. Turnout is calculated by summing electorates and total vote in all wards with a contest in each local authority.

Where there are large discrepancies between average turnout as reported in the Aggregate Statistics section at the front of this volume (and repeated in Table 1A) and aggregate turnout reported in this Table such discrepancies can mostly be explained by the operation of our algorithm for calculating total vote in multimember wards. In some of the more extreme cases we have been able to calculate from the official returns the actual number of ballot papers issued and hence the actual total vote. This figure has replaced the figure for calculated total vote. In other cases, where no indication has been given of ballot papers issued, we are unable to replace our estimate of total vote.
