It is appropriate that on the twentieth anniversary of our publication of local election results we acknowledge some of those who have helped to ensure the continuity of the Local Elections Handbook**.

First and foremost, we thank all those local Electoral Administrators who respond to our seemingly incessant requests for information. In the last two decades the provision of results has come a long way. When we started to compile these data many of those toiling away in preparing electoral registers and in organising the elections expressed surprise that anyone from outside their area would be at all interested. Now, with the advance of technology, more and more local authorities are posting their results on the web, sometimes within minutes of the official declaration. This streamlines collation, but we often still need to contact local authorities either to check a fact or because vital pieces of information are omitted from the electronic version of the results.

Along the way a very large number of individuals have assisted in collecting, collating, processing, analysing and publishing local electoral data. Alan Willis and John Woollard have been towers of strength and endeavour. Without them we may well have concluded some years ago that the task of publishing local election results was simply too great and that there were more manageable projects to undertake. In Plymouth there have been too many people to list, but we do want to single out the current team of Galina Borisyuk, Brian Cheal, Dawn Cole and Lawrence Ware. Their work begins some months before each round of elections, assessing the scale and impact of boundary changes, the complexities of the electoral cycle and how many seats are to be contested. But it is after the elections that the fun really begins. There is a mistaken view held in some quarters that collecting and analysing the results of a general election, where millions of votes are cast, is more difficult. In fact, the number of votes cast is largely irrelevant to the process of collection. In 2004, a relatively quiet year, we collected the results for almost 3,500 wards – more than five times the number of parliamentary constituencies. Analysing the outcome in single member parliamentary constituencies is also somewhat easier than grappling with the difficulties of multimember wards. That the number of mistakes is so relatively small is a testament to the skill and experience of our team.

Three organisations should also be mentioned. The University of Plymouth has provided all manner of valuable support over the years, including help with computing, administration, reprographics and staffing. Local Government Chronicle has backed us financially and logistically, and we thank the various editors who have kept a watchful, yet benevolent eye over the Centre's progress. In 2004 we are also pleased to acknowledge support from the Electoral Commission, which has enabled us to collect more detailed information, specifically about the impact of combined elections on turnout.

It was eight months after the 1985 county council elections before we were able to publish the results. In 2004, despite the advances that have been made, it has taken six months for this publication to appear. There's a moral here but for the moment we can't quite work out what it is!

Introduction

Local elections in 2004 were held in England for the 36 metropolitan boroughs, for 89 shire districts and 19 unitary councils. There were also elections for the 22 Welsh county/county borough councils, whose previous elections took place in 1999. These were originally scheduled for 2003 but were postponed so as to avoid clashing with those for the Welsh Assembly. In London there were the second elections to the Greater London Authority (GLA), with electors selecting both a Mayor and Assembly. There were no local elections in Scotland. The local elections, normally held in May, were postponed until June 10th and were simultaneous with those for the European Parliament.

Extensive ward boundary changes meant that all metropolitan boroughs conducted all-out rather than partial council elections. Similarly, 9 unitary authorities, 14 districts and 6 Welsh councils implemented boundary reviews. The metropolitan boroughs retain three-member wards, meaning that for every election each ward re-elects at least one councillor, but for other authorities the number of councillors per ward fluctuates.

Across England and Wales, though excluding the GLA, elections were scheduled for a total of 3,453 wards (divisions in Wales) and 6,075 seats. Because of boundary changes the number of seats gained or lost by each of the main parties has been estimated, based on our assumption of which party would have won the previous election had new boundaries been in place. Accordingly, the Conservative party emerged as the principal winners, gaining an additional 240 seats whilst Labour made net losses of just short of 500 seats. The Liberal Democrats also made gains of approximately 150 seats and there was also progress for candidates standing either as Independents or for one of the proliferating minor parties. In Wales, the nationalist party, Plaid Cymru, unable to match its spectacular performance in 1999, lost 30 seats. These results see the Conservatives extend their lead as the largest party of local government.

The second elections for the directly elected mayor of London and 25 member Greater London Assembly (GLA) were also held. The mayoral election was won again by Ken Livingstone, although standing this time as the official Labour, rather than as an Independent candidate. The runner-up was Steve Norris for the Conservatives, a position he filled also in 2000. The Greater London Assembly election saw few seats changing hands. Labour lost two seats, and the Green party lost one. The United Kingdom Independence Party (UKIP) gained two while the Liberal Democrats increased their Assembly members from four to five.

Local elections in England and Wales

With wholesale boundary changes and whole council elections for the metropolitan boroughs this was a bad time for Labour to have so much at stake. The Labour leadership made little attempt to disguise the scale of losses. The Home Secretary was 'mortified', the Deputy Prime Minister believed that the government had received a 'kicking' while Prime Minister Blair pleaded for his party to 'hold its nerve' whilst apologising to his party's defeated councillors. There was a plea for party unity from the Chancellor as some dissident backbenchers raised doubts about Blair's leadership. Almost one in five of Labour's seats were lost.

Table 1 provides the broad picture of voting. Although it contested fewer wards and seats than Labour, the Conservative party captured more votes. The Liberal Democrats finished in a creditable third place, just six percentage points separating first from third. It is noticeable that none of the main parties received the support of more than three in ten voters and that 18% of voters, almost one in five, supported candidates standing for smaller parties.

With more than six thousand seats at stake there were pressures on local parties to find sufficient candidates to fight each vacancy. Virtually seven in ten wards had at least one candidate from the main parties but neither the Conservatives nor Liberal Democrats were able to field as many candidates as did Labour. The Liberal Democrats contested less than two-thirds of vacancies while the Conservatives challenged in three-quarters. By contrast, Labour candidates fought almost nine in ten seats overall. In Wales, Plaid Cymru contested four in every ten seats.

Although Labour finished behind the Conservatives in the popular vote those positions were reversed when seats were decided. This is unsurprising given that those authorities with elections were largely urban and represent Labour's traditional heartlands. It does suggest, however, that Labour's local vote, like its parliamentary equivalent, is efficiently distributed. Labour's seat share was almost eight points larger than its vote but the seats/votes relationships for both the Conservatives and Liberal Democrats were more proportional. As expected under the 'first past the post' voting system, support for minor parties did not translate particularly well in the allocation of council seats. The Greens won 23 seats overall, more than half of these captured in the metropolitan boroughs. Independents accounted for a total of 479 seats, 8% of those available, although a large majority of these were in rural Wales.

The combination of boundary changes and complex electoral cycles militates comparisons with past voting. The most reliable base is the metropolitan boroughs. As Table 1 shows, Labour obtained about a third of votes and the Conservatives finished narrowly ahead of the Liberal Democrats. Labour's leaders were right to express concern; this vote is the party's lowest since these authorities were established by the 1972 Local Government Act – lower even than the dismal results in the mid 1970s. It was also one of the few occasions when the party failed to win an absolute majority of metropolitan council seats.

To a large extent the struggle for second place has helped Labour avert disaster. In 2003 the Conservatives polled just 33,000 more votes than did the Liberal Democrats and had barely a one-point advantage. In 2004 the gap narrowed to a mere 13,000 votes with less than a percentage point now separating the two parties. However, it is clear that the Liberal Democrats may justifiably claim to be the principal opposition to Labour in the metropolitan areas. For three consecutive elections they have won a greater share of seats than has the Conservative party, despite contesting more than two hundred fewer vacancies in 2004. Clearly, there are issues here regarding the efficiency of each party's vote distribution with the Liberal Democrats apparently more proficient at targeting its support.

Wales is another area where direct comparisons with past voting may be made, though of course the previous election was held five and not four years ago. Labour's vote declined by almost four percentage points while there was an almost two point fall for Plaid Cymru. There were only modest increases in vote share for both Conservative and Liberal Democrats but the largest increase was seen in support for Independent candidates, whose overall vote share rose from 19% to 22.7%. Although there was only a modest increase in the Conservative vote it did rather better in increasing its seat share, albeit from a low starting base. There was a greater improvement for the Liberal Democrats, with seat share rising from 7.7% to 11.6%. Among the main political parties the largest decline in seats was Labour's, a six-point fall from five years before.

In the English shire districts the Conservatives enjoy a distinct advantage over its rivals and seat share was greater than vote share. Successful Conservative candidates outnumber Labour and Liberal Democrats combined. Labour's third place behind the Liberal Democrats saw it win less than one in five seats. Despite contesting only three-quarters of vacancies the Liberal Democrats won 24% of seats.

In common with the shire districts it is inappropriate to make past comparisons of voting in the English unitary councils. In 2004 it proved a tight race between Labour and Conservative, with the latter marginally ahead amongst a group of authorities that would not necessarily favour it. What is especially interesting, however, is the relative performances in winning seats. Here, Labour did particularly well, winning 41% overall, ahead of the Conservatives and twice as many as won by the Liberal Democrats.

The Conservative party was also hampered by the fact that the majority of councils it gained were among those previously categorised as 'No overall control', a transition that fails to excite headline writers (see Table 2). Two councils were captured from Labour, Tamworth and Thurrock, but only the solitary Eastbourne from the Liberal Democrats. In fact, there were few signs of the party driving the Liberal Democrats out of the south east or of weakening Labour's stranglehold on urban Britain. Labour's principal gains were in Wales where it re-gained control of Caerphilly and Rhondda Cynon Taff, each lost in 1999 following the revolt against the Prime Minister's insistence on imposing his will over the Welsh Labour party. The Liberal Democrats made just two gains, Pendle from no overall control, but more spectacularly, Newcastle upon Tyne from Labour. It was helped, of course, by the whole council election but it was no small matter to depose Labour which had controlled the authority since reorganisation. The Liberal Democrats polled 42% to Labour's 34% but enjoyed a 'winner's bonus', capturing 62% of seats.

The number of councils under no overall control remains static. These councils, now 146 in total across Britain, continue as a significant feature of the political landscape; one in three councils have no single party able to form a majority administration. The Conservatives control 151 councils – more than Labour (94) and almost five times as many as the Liberal Democrats (31). Each of the nationalist parties controls only a single council.

Before commenting on turnout we should record a methodological note. Because many local authorities use multi-member wards/divisions and do not report the actual number of ballot papers included in the count we have, in the past, not had a wholly reliable figure for turnout. To overcome this difficulty we have employed various methodological 'fixes' over the years, for some time favouring an algorithm which uses the maximum vote for each party's candidates in order to calculate total votes cast. In the case of Independents this method groups them according to the number of vacancies. The maximum or 'top vote' method has been tested against known data (the actual number of ballots) and found to be fairly reliable. However, we have been aware that the method works best only if voters do not engage in split-ticket voting (voters dividing votes amongst candidates from separate parties) or partial abstention (voters not using the full quota of available votes largely because their favoured party has not fielded a full slate of candidates). In such cases the method delivers an under- or over-estimate of actual turnout. The proposed new technique for estimating turnout, termed for the moment the 'weighted sum of votes' method, takes some account of the factors outlined above. Our initial tests suggest that this new method is more reliable, particularly where the pattern of party competition is asymmetrical.

Table 3 (see also Tables A1 and A3) gives various figures for electoral turnout in order that readers can judge for themselves the effect of using a new method of calculation. For 2004 we invested substantial time in obtaining the reported percentage turnout in all wards with multiple vacancies. We did this so that we could better compare each local authority's figures with our own calculations. Unfortunately, we were unable in most cases to obtain the actual number of ballots included in the count. Therefore, we calculated this figure for ourselves using percentage turnout and reported electorate. We realise that since percentage turnout is rarely given to more than one decimal place this method of calculation has to be an estimate, though the level of accuracy is acceptable for our purpose.

The first set of figures to consider in Table 3 are those relating to total vote/ballots. Reported ballot papers represents our calculation based on percentage turnout. This shows that for all local elections the number of people voting was 7,415,664. The row below gives the total vote based on our previous method for calculating this figure, namely the maximum vote for each party's candidate. As can be seen, this figure results in a higher estimate of the numbers voting – some 261,369 additional electors. By contrast, the weighted sum of votes method produces a figure that approximates more closely with that for reported turnout; the difference between the two calculations is an underestimate of 75,239 votes. The effect can be better assessed by examining the figures on aggregate turnout – this sums all of the votes and electorates in contested wards. Overall turnout using reported vote gives a turnout figure of 40.4% while the weighted sum of votes procedure gives 39.9% - an under-estimate of half of one percentage point. By contrast, the top vote method suggests that turnout was 41.8% - an overestimate of almost one and a half percentage points.

Not all local authorities are affected in the same way, however. The unitary councils and shire districts show turnout hardly varying, regardless of the method of calculation. Larger differences affect both the metropolitan boroughs and to a greater extent, Wales. We suspect that in both cases it is the variable pattern of party competition and the extent of split-ticket voting that affects the calculation and tends to exaggerate the number of votes cast when the top vote method is employed.

We can safely assume, therefore, that turnout was 40% at the 2004 local elections. As such this shows a significant improvement, although as mentioned above comparisons with previous years' voting are difficult. The metropolitan boroughs offer the best opportunity for some kind of comparative analysis. This shows that turnout for these authorities was the highest since the so-called 'poll tax' elections of 1990. Given that metropolitan borough turnout has been struggling to exceed a third of eligible electors for the past decade this possibly represents a significant moment in the struggle to combat voter apathy.

There can be little doubt that the effect of conducting all-postal elections in three regions (North East, North West, Yorkshire and the Humber) increased turnout. Average turnout reached 44.8% in metropolitan boroughs in the North East, 43.8% in Yorkshire and the Humber and 40.4% in the North West. In the West Midlands, where no all-postal pilots were held, turnout was 37.2%. Similar inter-regional differences could also be found amongst the shire districts and unitary councils. So, while there was a general increase in turnout of about 7-10 percentage points, the rise in all-postal regions was 3-6 points higher again.

Two further points are worth noting about the level of turnout. First, boundary changes meant that electors were choosing the whole of their metropolitan borough councillors, rather than a third, which the case is normally. However, the last time this occurred in the early 1980s a similar sharp increase in turnout did not occur. The second caveat is in estimating the effect of conducting the local and European elections on the same day. Did that coincidence drive local turnout higher than would otherwise have been the case? In response we note that since European election turnout is invariably lower than that for local elections, the effect, if any, of conducting simultaneous elections would have been to increase turnout for the European election. In 2004 the turnout at the European elections was the highest on record.

The competition for local council seats continues. Out of more than six thousand seats there were just 170 (2.8% of all seats) where the winner was returned unopposed. The vast majority of these unopposed returns, 89.4%, were seats on the Welsh counties/county boroughs. Examining the distribution further we find that just four local authorities, Isle of Anglesey, Flintshire, Gwynedd and Powys, are largely responsible for the volume of uncontested seats.

A majority of local electors had an opportunity to choose between candidates from one of the three main parties. Three-party competition was greatest in the metropolitan boroughs where more than eight in ten wards featured at least one candidate from Conservative, Labour or Liberal Democrat parties. Approximately two-thirds of unitary council and shire district wards had the equivalent level of party competition but in Wales less than one in five wards did so. The addition of minor party and Independent candidates saw the total number rise to 17,608 – an average of 2.9 candidates for each vacancy. This ratio is similar for other recent local elections.

The proportion of women candidates continues to be around 30%. Over five thousand women contested the elections and it was noticeable that a greater proportion stood in England than in Wales. A total of 1,687 women candidates were elected, 27.8% of the total councillors chosen in 2004. For all authorities the proportion of women elected is always slightly lower than the proportion of candidates but the differences are so small that it is clear the voters do not discriminate with regard to a candidate's sex.

They do appear to favour incumbents, however, although we cannot distinguish between popularity of the party, safeness of the seat, or any personal vote enjoyed by sitting councillors. Nevertheless, it is true that councillors that want a further term of office have a very good chance of achieving that ambition. There were almost five thousand sitting councillors that sought re-election. Many had seen their previous ward's boundaries reorganised but that did not appear to deter them. In effect, more than eight in ten seats would have had at least one candidate standing who had been a member of the previous council. Returning councillors were most plentiful in the metropolitan boroughs where only one in eight wards had candidates standing that had not been members of the retiring council.

Relatively few incumbents were defeated. Out of 4,980 that stood again some 4,066 (81.6%) were returned. Sitting councillors in the metropolitan boroughs were most likely to win another term, 84.9% were re-elected, but even in Wales, the least favourable climate for returning councillors, some 78.4% of incumbents were successful. Prior to the elections the Welsh Assembly had offered cash incentives to try and persuade long-serving councillors to make way for new faces. Of course, the other side of the argument is that local authorities need a large degree of continuity of membership, particularly when councillors remain essentially part-time volunteers. Two-thirds of councillors elected in 2004 were re-elected incumbents. In the metropolitan boroughs, where widespread boundary changes came into force, almost three-quarters of those elected had been members of the previous council.

Elections for the Greater London Authority

These were the second elections for the Greater London Authority, comprising a directly elected mayor and 25 member Assembly. The Supplementary Vote (SV) is used to select the mayor, while the Additional Member System (AMS) is employed to elect the Assembly.

Eleven candidates stood for mayor, the same number that stood in 2000. The overall result of the mayoral election is provided in Table 4 but more detailed results for each of the 14 Assembly constituencies is provided in the following section. Under SV each voter can state up to two preferences, a first and a second vote. The actual number of first, second votes, and vote share for each of the eleven candidates is shown in Table 4. However, SV proceeds by eliminating all but the top two candidates for the second vote count if no single candidate has won an absolute majority of first votes - as happened in 2004 as it had in 2000. Nevertheless, all voters, unaware of who those top two candidates might be, have to cast a second vote at the same time as their first vote is cast. Many voters will vote for the same candidate twice. Others, selecting one of the top two candidates with their first vote will support another candidate with their second vote. Inevitably, that means that many second votes cast are, strictly speaking, invalid in the sense that those votes are not transferred. It is a moot point whether second votes cast for already eliminated candidates can be counted as valid but we have done so for our calculations. Accordingly, the third set of figures in Table 4 show the number of valid second votes while the final set represent the final vote tallies for Livingsone and Norris.

Livingstone had the largest share of first votes but was not elected after the first round because his total was less than an absolute majority. He and the second-placed candidate, Steve Norris, Conservative party, then progressed to the second round whilst remaining candidates were eliminated from the contest. Following the count of second votes, Livingstone's total was supplemented by a further 142,839 eligible second votes. Meanwhile Norris' total rose by a further 124,755 eligible second votes, giving Livingstone a majority of 161,202 votes. The mayor's share of the final vote was 55.4% to Norris' 44.6%.

It is worth noting that Livingstone's final vote tally (combined first and valid second vote) is 44.4% of all first votes – less than an absolute majority of those that cast a valid first ballot. Neither Livingstone nor Norris won an absolute majority of first votes cast in any constituency. In eleven of fourteen constituencies, the leading candidate won an absolute majority only after the counting of second votes.

Total		1,863,671	100	1,591,443	100	524,941	100.1	1,495,558	100

From a total 1,591,443 second votes cast, only 267,594 (16.8%) contributed towards determining the winning candidate. The remaining 1,323,849 second votes did not contribute towards the final count, either because they favoured candidates already eliminated from the second stage (1,222,287 votes) or because they were second votes cast in favour of Livingstone/Norris by electors who had chosen those candidates in the first round (101,562 votes). A considerable number of voters (143,529) supported the same candidate with both of their votes. In effect, almost eight per cent (7.7%) or one in 12 voters cast a second vote that, whatever the outcome of the first round of voting, could not be an eligible second vote.

One of the eliminated candidates, Simon Hughes, Liberal Democrat, attracted a total of 465,704 second votes, slightly less than the combined second vote total for Livingstone and Norris. However, many of these second votes for Hughes came from supporters of Norris and Livingstone or were from people who had already supported Hughes with their first vote.

Turnout (total valid votes excluding rejected ballots) was 35.9% for the mayoral election and we include the figures for the Assembly elections for ease of comparison (see Table 5). Unadjusted turnout (a figure that includes rejected ballots) rose by two and a half percentage points to 37% overall. As Table 5 shows, a large majority of electors that participated in the mayoral contest also took part in at least one element of the Assembly election. The small differences in turnout between mayoral, constituency and list voting may be accounted for by the number of rejected ballots and that some parties contested only a fraction of seats.

The Assembly Election

The Conservatives are now the largest party in the 25-member Assembly, although still four seats short of an overall majority (Table 6). Labour lost one constituency (Brent & Harrow) and one list seat. The Liberal Democrats made a net gain of one seat with all of its seats won from among the 11 available on the London-wide list. The Greens' total list seats fell from three to two. The biggest gain, two list seats, was made by UKIP, bringing to five the number of parties represented in the new Assembly.

Table 6: Seats in the Greater London Assembly, 2004

Liberal Democrats	0	5	0	4	+1
Green	0	2	0	3	-1
UKIP	0	2	0	0	+2
Total	14	11	14	11

1.8 million valid votes were cast – 60,504 fewer than were cast in the London mayoral race. The Conservative polled slightly less than one in three votes with Labour supported by roughly one in four voters. The two main parties together received 56% of the total constituency vote but won all 14 seats.

Approximately 70,000 more eligible list votes were recorded than were cast in the constituencies and 9,495 than were cast as valid votes in the mayoral election. This may be a function of differential party competition (the BNP, for example, stood only list candidates) or the ease of completing the ballot papers. The Conservatives polled the most votes but its share was lower than its constituency support – 28.5% compared with 31.2% (Table 7). Support for Labour was higher in the list than in the constituencies although the difference was small – 23,439 votes. Liberal Democrats attracted more support on constituency ballots. Support for UKIP and the Greens was lower among list than constituency voters whilst the opposite was true for Respect and the Christian Peoples Alliance. The BNP polled over ninety thousand list votes – almost one in twenty that were cast.

The Greater London Assembly has an electoral threshold, which stipulates that any party failing to win 5% of the London-wide list vote is ineligible for a seat. Without that threshold the BNP would have won the sixth list seat and Respect the seventh. Both Labour and the Liberal Democrats would have won one fewer list seat as a consequence.

Women candidates won ten of the 25 (40%) Assembly seats (Table 8). Women Assembly members divide equally between the constituencies and list seats. In terms of party labels, two of the nine Conservatives are women, four of seven Labour members and three of five Liberal Democrats. Jenny Jones, elected for the Greens, ensured that the party has equality of representation but UKIP's two members are both men.

Using the Handbook

In 2004 there were elections in England for a total of 144 local authorities comprising 36 Metropolitan boroughs, 19 Unitary councils and 89 Shire District councils. Additionally, there were local elections for 22 Unitary councils in Wales, making a grand total of 166 local authorities with elections. The election was also held for the Greater London Authority (GLA), comprising a directly elected mayor and 25-member Assembly. There were no local elections in Scotland. The elections, normally held in May, were postponed and conducted simultaneously with elections for the European Parliament on Thursday, June 10th.

The Handbook is organised into sections, which cover the GLA, Metropolitan, Unitary, Shire district and Welsh county/county borough councils respectively. Within these categories councils are organised alphabetically and results are reported in alphabetical order of ward name. Election results have generally been taken from figures provided by, and checked with, Electoral Administrators.

Before the ward by ward results we have provided a section containing aggregate data covering each local authority. Ward results for each authority were aggregated to produce this set of summary statistics. These include the percentage vote share for a range of parties and independent candidates. Where wards elect more than one councillor then the vote of the best placed candidate for each party is used in calculating total vote. In contests featuring multiple Independent candidates these were grouped according to the number of seats in a ward. In the case of a three-member ward with six Independent candidates, therefore, the votes of the first and fourth placed Independent contribute towards the total vote figure. The number of seats contested and the number of seats won by each party is also noted.

Turnout, in brackets after the name of the authority, is the average turnout in those wards which had a contested election. Table 3A in the Appendix contains details of local authority turnout that has been calculated using different methods. These methods for calculating local authority level turnout will produce slightly different figures for those authorities that have a large range for ward level electorates and where complex patterns of contestation in multi-member wards result in an under- or over-estimate of actual votes cast. In the majority of cases the differences between the two methods are rather small.

In those authorities where a direct comparison with the 2000 (1999 in the case of Wales) elections is possible we have also provided the percentage change for the different parties. In a large number of cases this has not proved practicable. Some of the councils held their previous election not in 2000 but in another year and we felt that comparisons based on variable years might prove misleading. There have also been numerous boundary changes introduced in recent years and this has complicated the picture still further. In those cases where comparisons are made between a party's vote in 2004 and 2000 we have not controlled for varying patterns of party competition. Interested readers should consult the relevant year's Handbook for such detailed information.

The final two lines of the summary of aggregate statistics provide information relating to the number of candidates fielded by each party as well as the number of candidates that were successfully elected. Note, that since some councils are electing only a fraction of the council body (e.g. some Unitary and District councils) that the 'seats won' category is not an equivalent to the full council composition.

In the main body of the book the results for each ward are listed in alphabetical order within each local authority. The figure in brackets is the electorate for 2004. The practice adopted by local authorities for calculating this figure varies but the introduction of rolling electoral registers means that this figure is a good approximation of the numbers eligible to vote on election day. Nevertheless, it has been impossible to adopt a standard definition of electorate or reliably to identify the particular procedures used by each authority.

The appearance of a date in [square brackets] after the electorate indicates that the election for some reason was not held on June 10 but was contested on the later, specified date. This year there were five such contests, one held on July 8 – Shrewsbury & Atcham (Column); one held on July 15 – Blackburn with Darwen (Earcroft – two seats); and the remaining three held on July 22 – Bridgend (Sarn); Conwy (Gower) and Stoke on Trent (Burslem South). These by-election results have been incorporated into the aggregate statistics as though they did take place on June 10.

Candidates are listed in descending order of vote within each ward. The first initial is given; 'Ms.' after a candidate's name indicates a woman; and '*' indicates that the candidate was a sitting councillor, although not necessarily for the same ward. 'Vote' is the number of electors who supported each candidate and 'Share' the proportion of the total number who cast a valid ballot supporting each candidate. The process of rounding means that some shares do not necessarily sum to 100.

In the case of multi-member wards where more than one vacancy was filled we have used the vote of each party's best placed candidate in order to calculate total vote and hence party shares. Where a candidate(s) was returned unopposed then either '0' or '0.0' are used in the fields for vote, share and turnout.

Below the list of candidates is a further line of data. First, we print the name of the party whose candidate finished top of the poll at the corresponding election in 2000 (1999 in Wales) (or later in some authorities where the equivalent seat was last contested in a different year). In many local authorities recent ward boundary changes that were implemented for the first time in 2004 mean that it has not been possible to indicate a winning party at the previous election in a large number of cases. In multi-member wards it is important not to assume that the named party won all the available seats in that ward; so-called 'split-wards' where seats are shared between parties are fairly common.

Next, is recorded the percentage turnout. Turnout is the proportion of the electorate that cast valid ballots at the election. In the overwhelming majority of cases in 2004 turnout is that given by the local Electoral Administrator and has thus been calculated knowing the number of valid ballot papers issued. In a relatively small number of cases we have ourselves calculated turnout from the available information but this year only for single member wards – turnout data for all multimember wards has been collected from Electoral Administrators. The figure to the right of the turnout represents the lead of the winning party over the second placed party in percentage terms rounded to one decimal place. The process of rounding means that in some cases the percentage majority may not be exactly the same as the winning party's vote share minus the second-placed party's share.

Candidates standing for local election use an extensive variety of party labels that now have to be officially registered with the Electoral Commission. These have been used throughout the Handbook, leading to a proliferation of party labels. These labels, and the abbreviations we have used, are described below.
