Acknowledgements

We would like, as always, to acknowledge the response by Electoral Administrators to our requests for information, which now extends to cover data on postal ballots, spoilt papers etc. As our demands grow we hope that more local authorities take advantage of our offer to provide free of charge a detailed record of our data holdings from 1973 onwards for their particular authority. There should also be a special mention for the team at London Elects, their provision of electoral data sets new standards in the field and we welcome their innovations and comprehensiveness.

Our thanks also go to the Electoral Commission, which provided support for our data collection, principally that concerning the numbers for postal and in person voting.

Each handbook requires a great deal of work from a team based here in Plymouth. Our gratitude to them as always.

Introduction

Local elections took place in England and Wales on May 1st, 2008. The London mayor and assembly election dominated media coverage, with the incumbent Ken Livingstone seeking a third consecutive term, but across the rest of England, a total of 137 local authorities held elections. These comprised 36 metropolitan boroughs, 78 shire districts, 19 unitary councils and a further four 'shadow' councils in newly established unitary areas. Most of these authorities were electing a fraction of the seats although whole council elections took place in a number that were either implementing ward boundary changes or new structures. All 22 local authorities in Wales held whole council elections. About a third of local authorities joined the growing band that prefers to organise the count on the day following rather than overnight. The last election to declare was that for London mayor and assembly, announced shortly before midnight on Friday May 2.

Although the London Assembly has just 25 elected members, elsewhere more than 4,100 council seats in 3,400 wards were at stake, around a third located in Wales and a slightly smaller percentage than that in the shires. Generally, these council seats were last fought in June 2004 after the elections were postponed from May to coincide with those for the European Parliament. Then, Labour suffered a backlash from its policy on Iraq and the Conservatives advanced at the expense also of the Liberal Democrats. Prior to the campaign it seemed that Labour's previous performance had been so bad (the worst since the late 1960s) that a further setback was unlikely and that the Conservatives would find it difficult to make progress. However, Gordon Brown's decision in his last budget before becoming Prime Minister to abolish the 10p in the pound tax rate, combined with rapidly rising fuel and food prices, meant the electoral mood turned further against Labour.

A strong Conservative showing was confirmed when Boris Johnson ousted Livingstone from the post of London mayor. Labour's misery was complete and the party made no attempt to disguise the severity of its losses. Our estimate of the national equivalent vote placed the Conservatives on 43%, three points higher than in 2007, Labour on 24% (down two points) and in third place the Liberal Democrats on 23% (down one point). Inevitably, given boundary changes, estimating precisely the number of seats being defended by each party added some element of uncertainty to the post-election analysis. In our view, media reports under-estimated the overall scale of gains and losses. Despite its already high base the Conservatives made a net gain of around 300 seats, Labour recorded net losses of more than 400 seats with the Liberal Democrats finishing marginally ahead of where they had started. Further gains were made by candidates standing for a range of minor parties, principally the Greens, while in Wales, Plaid Cymru made a net gain of 31 seats.

Table 1 is a summary of the state of the parties in local councils and seats. Across England there are now more Conservative councillors than Labour and Liberal Democrats combined while the party currently holds 44% of council seats in Great Britain. Almost half of the councils in Britain are under Conservative control. A total of 34 councils (one in five) underwent some change in political control (Table 2). The Conservatives added a further nine authorities with Labour losing control in 10. A notable gain for the Conservatives was the metropolitan borough of Bury (visited on Friday by David Cameron), which it last controlled at the height of the Thatcher era. There were further advances in other boroughs, including Birmingham, Oldham, North Tyneside, Salford and Sunderland. Across all 36 boroughs the Conservatives only narrowly missed out-polling Labour (Table 3) giving the party further encouragement that it is moving beyond its electoral base in southern England. Other noteworthy Conservative successes came in Nuneaton and Bedworth, Labour controlled since 1973, Harlow, Southampton and Redditch, whose parliamentary seat is currently held by the Home Secretary, Jacqui Smith. The capture of the Vale of Glamorgan (again, warranting a visit from the busy party leader) doubled the number of Welsh councils under its control. Although Labour gained enough seats to take control in Slough, it lost control of Hartlepool, Reading and Wolverhampton as well as a clutch of authorities in Wales, including Blaenau Gwent where the party has suffered from internal divisions. In Cardiff the party now lies in third place, a far cry from 1999 when it controlled 50 seats there. Liberal Democrats lost control of Liverpool and Pendle although in the former it then re-claimed control when an Independent Labour councillor was swiftly recruited to the cause. By contrast, the victories in Burnley, Sheffield and St. Albans were rather more conventional.

Almost seven million votes were cast and more than one in three went to Conservative candidates, a quarter was cast for Labour and a fifth for the Liberal Democrats. Almost one in five voters supported either an Independent candidate or favoured one of a multitude of minor parties. Eight in ten wards featured a candidate from one of the two main parties with the Liberal Democrats contesting just five hundred fewer. One in five wards was fought by the Green party. In Wales, Plaid Cymru contested more wards than did both Conservative and Liberal Democrat parties.

Some measure of the scale of Labour's decline (and Conservative recovery) is voting in the metropolitan boroughs. This is always a good point of comparison because of the repeating and symmetrical electoral cycle in these authorities. Fewer than nine thousand votes separated the two parties, a gap that might have been narrower had the Conservatives contested as many wards. In 2004 the Conservatives were seven percentage points behind Labour and won seventy fewer wards. Labour's vote continues to be better distributed, however, winning 8% more wards and finishing seventy seats ahead of its rival. Nevertheless, the Conservative party now finds itself in a much stronger position to challenge Labour in its heartland. In Walsall an absolute majority of voters chose Conservative candidates and in another eight boroughs more than four in ten votes were cast in the party's favour.

The electoral advantage moves to the Conservatives in the shire districts. Here, the party won 46% of votes and 58% of the seats while Labour struggled to finish behind the Liberal Democrats. The Liberal Democrats' performance across the different types of local authority confounds the often expected fate for a third party under first past the post voting and shows the extent and impact of targeted campaigning. In most cases the party's share of seats is only marginally smaller than its vote share but in the metropolitan boroughs it is actually higher – a feat that the party has now achieved on more than one occasion.

Labour's decline in Wales continues. Between 2004 and 2008, there is a 4.3% 'swing' from the party to the Conservatives and its seat total has slumped from 563 in 1999 to 345 this year, a decline of nearly 40%. By contrast, the Conservatives have more than doubled their representation. The Liberal Democrats and Independents have also been on an upward trajectory, although Plaid Cymru's fortunes have rather fluctuated. It is impossible to provide a neat summary of the prevailing party system in Wales' 22 local authorities. Some authorities are easier to describe than others. For example, the capital city is a classic three-party system but in Swansea the largest party, Labour, won just 26% of the overall vote. Other authorities provide a patchwork of two-party systems. In Blaenau Gwent, the prevailing battle now lies between Labour and Independents, but in Rhondda, Cynon, Taff it is Plaid Cymru that provide the challenge to Labour.

Recent local elections bring hope to the smaller parties that they can emulate the Liberal Democrats and establish their own presence in local government before raising a challenge for a parliamentary seat. The Greens have probably made the longest sustained effort but now find that the British National Party are overtaking them, at least in aggregate terms. The BNP outpolled the Greens by more than fifty thousand votes, despite a smaller number of candidates, although it did win two fewer seats. By contrast, the United Kingdom Independence Party (UKIP) does not fare as well, challenging in more than four hundred wards but winning less than a hundred thousand votes overall and a gain of just four seats. While it is true that Independents do not do as well as in the distant past such candidates refuse to disappear from local election contests. Electors in a quarter of wards (a majority in Wales) could support an Independent if desired. In Wales, Independents continue in large numbers, winning almost a third of the wards and over a quarter of all seats.

An increase in the number of parties contributes to the fact that fewer seats are now uncontested and the electorate is provided with a substantial choice between candidates. There were 13,317 candidates that stood in 3,421 wards and challenged for 4,104 seats – an average of more than three candidates per vacancy (Table 4). Just 112 wards went uncontested, 3.3% of the total (or 118 seats, 2.9% of total). A large majority of those uncontested seats were in Wales, 103, with just 15 across England. Nevertheless, the proportion of uncontested seats in Wales is falling. In 2008 the percentage uncontested is 8.1% but this is lower than the 12% in 2004 and half the 15.8% that went uncontested at the 1999 election.

Of the candidates contesting, some 30.8% were successfully elected, but the odds are rather different dependent on which authorities one examines. Candidates that stood in Wales had, ceteris paribus, a four in ten chance of being elected but those odds drop to less than three in ten for England. Defeated candidates were most numerous in the metropolitan boroughs where just 23.8% of those challenging were elected.

The pattern of party competition varies widely therefore. Whilst in English local authorities some 72% of contested wards feature candidates representing the three main parties the figure for Wales is just 17%. The metropolitan boroughs are the most competitive with 82% of contested wards offering voters a choice among the three main parties, followed by 78% for unitary councils and finally 62% for the shire districts. When vacancies, rather than wards are considered, the respective percentages are 82%, 67% and 58%. The difference in the percentages, therefore, reflects a tendency for local parties to field a solitary candidate in a multimember election. For example, in unitary authorities that held whole council elections in those wards with three vacancies the Liberal Democrats failed to field any candidates in a third of cases, a lone candidate in 20% of cases and only a full slate of three candidates in 42% of cases. The most common form of two-party competition is the traditional battle between Conservative and Labour. This configuration accounted for 19% of the electoral situations in the shire districts but in Wales just 12% of contests were of this type. Much more prevalent in Wales were elections featuring a Labour candidate challenged by either an Independent or candidate from Plaid Cymru – 31% of vacancies were contested in this way.

Four thousand women candidates contested the elections in 2008, representing 30% of all candidates. This is a slightly lower figure than in previous elections but is largely accounted for by the relatively low representation in Wales where just over a quarter of candidates are women. Excluding the authorities in Wales brings the percentage up to 31%, the same as in 2007. The proportion of men and women candidates contesting local elections now appears fixed in the ratio 2:1 and the rapid rise in women candidates during the second half of the 1980s has stopped. Further investigation shows variations among the proportion of women candidates both across the different types of authorities and within each type. For example, in the metropolitan and shire district areas around a third of authorities saw between 20-30% of vacancies contested by women, but in the unitary authorities with whole council elections there are nearer six in every ten authorities with this level of contestation. There is just one authority, Purbeck district council, where women candidates outnumbered the men. By contrast, there are three local authorities in Wales where the proportion of women is fewer than one in five candidates.

Another trend that continues is for the percentage of women elected to be slightly less than the percentage for women candidates. Women comprise 28.6% of candidates elected in 2008, a figure that is heavily influenced by the relatively low proportion of women elected in Wales - just 24.8% of the total. However, a third of councillors elected in 2008 in the metropolitan boroughs are women, a higher proportion than amongst candidates.

There are some small differences among the three main parties in terms of both the recruitment of women candidates and also in how much success those candidates subsequently have in becoming elected. Some 31% of Conservative and Labour candidates are women, a figure that rises to 34% for the Liberal Democrats. A third of all Liberal Democrats elected in 2008 are women, slightly more than the 28-29% for Conservative and Labour. The Green party continues to stand out as the party that most favours women candidates; 45% of its candidates in 2008 is a woman and among those successful some 35% are women. Plaid Cymru reflects the general condition in Wales and only a quarter of its candidates and councillors is a woman.

More than three and a half thousand candidates were incumbents seeking re-election, 26.4% of all candidates. Expressed another way, 86% of the candidate slates contained an incumbent. This is higher than in 2007 when 74% of seats featured an incumbent. One in four incumbents that stood in 2008 was defeated. Naturally, Conservative incumbents fared best, with 92% elected but Liberal Democrats also did rather well with 79% of these successful. Would-be returning Labour councillors suffered most; only two in three was successful. Among the 2008 councillor intake 66% of the total are re-elected incumbents and the remaining 34% are either councillors that are returning after a period out of office or persons experiencing life on the council benches for the first time.

The total electorate for the English and Welsh local authorities holding elections in 2008 was just over 19.3 million. Almost two hundred thousand electors resided in wards that went uncontested. Around 7 million votes were cast and turnout was 36.5% using our weighted sum procedure that takes account of some local authorities holding multimember elections failing to report actual ballot papers counted. Across the authorities in England some 17.1 million registered electors had the opportunity to vote: about 45% of the country's total electorate. Across the country nearly 6 million valid votes were cast, making the overall aggregate turnout 35.0%, lower than the 37.9% in 2007 and 36.5% in 2006. Variations in turnout surface at the local authority level. Turnout was above 50% in only one authority (South Lakeland) but below 30% in 10 - four metropolitan boroughs (including Liverpool and Manchester), four unitary councils, and two districts. The electorate in Wales was 2.2 million and turnout was 44.8%, a slight increase on the 43.2% that voted in 2004 when the elections were held at the same time as those for the European Parliament. In three authorities, Anglesey (Ynys Mon), Ceredigion and Gwynedd, turnout rose above half the eligible electorate while in seven authorities fewer than four in ten electors voted.

Voting in London

Ken Livingstone's career as London mayor which began in 2000 ended in 2008. The final tally of votes gave him 47% to Boris Johnson's 53% share (Table 5). Trailing Johnson by 148,884 votes after the first vote, Livingstone recovered some of the deficit after the count of second votes among the eliminated candidates but the gap proved too large. Johnson's final tally of first and second votes is 48.4% of the total first votes cast – in the three elections thus far the elected London mayor has yet to obtain an absolute majority.

Other interesting characteristics of voting behaviour under Supplementary Vote rules may be gleaned from these results. Although it was clear from pre-election polls and campaign coverage that the contest was essentially a two-horse race, just one in five Conservative and Labour voters did not cast a second ballot (a second vote for one of the two leading candidates does not count if the first vote has been cast in their favour). Instead, 40% of Johnson voters and 36% of Livingstone supporters cast a second vote for the Liberal Democrat candidate, Brian Paddick. Presumably, many did this as a form of insurance against their preferred candidate being eliminated after the first round and a desire to stop their least preferred candidate from winning. Around 10% of Johnson first voters each cast second ballots for the Greens, BNP and UKIP respectively although it was obvious that none of these would be contesting the second round. This meant that three-quarters of the second votes cast in favour of the BNP and UKIP candidates came from people who had supported Boris Johnson with their first vote. Livingstone's supporters to some extent followed the pre-election tip from the candidate to support the Greens with one of their votes. Accordingly, a quarter of Labour voters switched their second vote to the Green party although that was less than the proportion that supported the Liberal Democrats. One in eight Labour voters gave both first and second votes to Livingstone; only one in twenty Johnson voters behaved in similar fashion.

The Additional Member System (AMS) is used to elect the twenty-five members of the London Assembly. This voting system is the same as that for electing both the Scottish Parliament and Welsh Assembly. Fourteen assembly members are elected from single member constituencies by simple plurality voting; the remaining eleven members are chosen from a London-wide list. Each voter has two votes – one for a constituency member and one for the list. The distribution of party list seats is determined by a formula that takes account of the number of constituency seats already won and aims to achieve an overall result that sees some equalisation between vote and seat shares. A party that fails to win 5% of the London-wide list vote is ineligible to receive a list seat.

Going into the election the Conservative party, as the largest party, was defending nine seats, Labour seven seats, the Liberal Democrats five, and the Greens and UKIP two seats each. The outcome (Table 6) shows a gain of two seats for the Conservatives, taking them to 11 seats but still short of an overall majority. Despite losing the mayoralty Labour was able to increase its representation in the Assembly by one seat. Having been denied an Assembly seat in 2004 because of the operation of the 5% threshold rule the anti-immigration British National Party (BNP) this time succeeded in winning a seat. The Liberal Democrats and UKIP each lost two seats. Further signs of the Conservative recovery were evident in the votes cast, with the party increasing its share of the constituency vote by six percentage points compared with 2004. Labour's vote too increased: a three point improvement on four years before. Support for the Liberal Democrats declined by around five-percentage points while the combined vote for other parties fell sharply. The several 'minor' parties together attracted the support of just one in eight of all voters compared with almost one in five in 2004.

Perhaps the most notable feature of the London Assembly voting is the closeness between each party's share of constituency and list votes. Under AMS we might expect to find substantial differences between each party's share for the two different kinds of seat, especially for smaller parties that are disadvantaged by simple plurality voting. Even the third-placed Liberal Democrats performed better at constituency than list level, though their third of a million votes were insufficient to win any constituency seats. The Greens did attract additional support on the list, but their increment was fewer than 10,000 votes. A party that does appear to have understood the voting system and adjusted its campaign accordingly is the BNP. It fielded a candidate in just one of the 14 constituencies, where it stood no realistic chance of victory, but explicitly asked voters instead for their list vote.

The composition of the new Assembly is described in Table 7 below.

The electorate for the London elections increased by 4.3% compared with 2004 to a total of 5,419,913. Table 8 shows percentage electoral turnout calculated in two separate ways (adjusted and unadjusted) for each of four votes (mayor first vote, mayor second vote, constituency vote, and list vote). The adjusted turnout uses only 'good' (i.e. valid) votes as the numerator while unadjusted turnout additionally includes those ballots rejected during the count. Overall, mayoral turnout was 45.3% unadjusted, 44.6% adjusted. The differences between adjusted and unadjusted turnout are rather small for most votes (normally within one percentage point) with the exception of the mayor second vote. This is because the number of ballots classified as rejected (the criteria for the second mayor vote being threefold – a ballot unmarked, the elector voting for too many candidates, or the elector's intention being uncertain) are highest for this vote.

For all types of contest the highest turnout (both adjusted and unadjusted) was in Bexley and Bromley and the lowest in the City and East constituency, with a more than ten point range between the two. Within constituencies there were only very small differences (0.0 – 0.2) in the levels of unadjusted turnout for the first mayoral, constituency and list ballots. In other words, voter 'roll off' was minimal with the vast majority being prepared to use all their voting opportunities once the decision to vote at all had been taken. Adjusted turnout showed greater though still small variations, reflecting perhaps both the pattern of party competition in individual constituencies and the judgements of local returning officers as to which ballot papers should be rejected.

Compared with the previous election in 2004, overall adjusted turnout rose by almost nine percentage points in the case of the mayoral vote, and by nearly ten points in respect of the constituency vote (Table 9). The biggest increase in mayoral turnout was in West Central (13.6%), with three other constituencies recording a double-digit rise. The increases in Brent and Harrow (5.5%) and South West (6.3%) were less than half that in the best performing constituency. West Central again topped the list for the constituency and list votes with a turnout increase of 14.4% and 13.1% respectively. Almost half its electors participated in 2008 compared with fewer than a third in 2004. It is also interesting to note that the gap in turnout between the constituency and list vote was much smaller in 2008 than in 2004. Whilst no constituency experienced more than a 0.2% difference in turnout at the 2008 election, in 2004 the range was from 0.6% to 2.3%.

Using the Handbook

In 2008 there were elections in England for a total of 137 local authorities comprising 36 metropolitan boroughs, 19 current and 4 'shadow' unitary authorities and 78 shire districts. There were also elections held for 22 councils in Wales. In London, elections were held both for the mayor and assembly.

The Handbook is organised into five sections, which cover the London mayor and assembly, metropolitan, unitary, shire district and Welsh councils respectively. Within these categories, constituencies in the case of London and elsewhere councils, are organised alphabetically. Results are reported in alphabetical order of ward name. Election results have generally been taken from figures provided by, and checked with, Electoral Administrators. In the case of the mayor and assembly the data are those kindly provided by London Elects.

Before the ward results we have provided a section containing aggregate data covering each local authority. Results for each authority were aggregated to produce this set of summary statistics. These include the percentage vote share for a range of parties and independent candidates. Where more than one councillor is elected then the vote of the best placed candidate for each party is used in calculating total vote. In contests featuring multiple Independent candidates these were grouped according to the number of seats in a ward. In the case of a three-member seat with six Independent candidates, therefore, the votes of the first and fourth placed Independent contribute towards the total vote figure. The number of seats contested and the number of seats won by each party is also noted.

Turnout, in brackets after the name of the authority, is the average turnout in those divisions/wards which had a contested election. The Appendix contains details of local authority turnout that has been calculated using different methods. These methods will produce slightly different figures for those authorities that have a large range for electorates and where complex patterns of contestation result in an under- or over-estimate of actual votes cast. In the majority of cases the differences between the methods are rather small. Reported turnout is a calculation based on the ward figures provided by each local authority – in theory this should be most accurate if note is taken of the actual number of ballot papers counted in the case of ward elections involving more than one vacancy. These data are not always given, and for this reason we have developed different techniques for overcoming this. The calculation of "average top vote" is based on the following procedure. Where wards elect more than one councillor then the vote for the best placed candidate for each party is used in calculating total total vote. In the case of Independent candidates these are grouped according to the number of seats in a ward. This total is divided by eligible electorate to arrive at the level of percentage turnout. The third measure, average weighted sum turnout, employs the Ware algorithm, a more sophisticated measure than that used for average top vote described above. An extensive discussion of this algorithm can be found in Ware, L., G. Borisjuk, C. Rallings, and M. Thrasher. "A New Algorithm for Estimating Voter Turnout When the Number of Ballot Papers Issued Is Unknown." Electoral Studies 25, no. 1 (2006): 59-71.

In those authorities where a direct comparison with the 2004 election is possible we have also provided the percentage change for the different parties. In some councils this has not proved practicable because of the nature of their electoral cycles.

The final two lines of the summary of aggregate statistics provide information relating to the number of candidates fielded by each party as well as the number of candidates successfully elected. Note, that since some councils are electing only a fraction of the council body that the 'seats won' category does not equate to the full council composition.

In the main body of the book the results for each ward are listed in alphabetical order within each local authority. The figure in brackets is the electorate for 2008. The practice adopted by local authorities for calculating this figure varies but the introduction of rolling electoral registers means that this figure is a good approximation of the numbers eligible to vote on election day. Nevertheless, it has been impossible to adopt a standard definition of electorate or reliably to identify the particular procedures used by each authority when compiling this figure.

The appearance of a date in [square brackets] after the electorate indicates that for some reason the election was not held on May 1 but was contested on the later, specified date. This year there were 6 such contests – two in England affecting Harlow and Carlisle and four in Wales concerning the councils of Gwynedd, Flintshire and two cases in Newport. Half of these contests were held on June 5 with remaining ones held the week following.

Candidates are listed in descending order of vote within each ward. The first initial is given; 'Ms.' after a candidate's name indicates a woman; and '*' indicates that the candidate was a sitting councillor, although not necessarily for the same ward. Vote is the number of electors who supported each candidate and Share the proportion of the total number who cast a valid ballot supporting each candidate. The process of rounding means that some shares do not necessarily sum to 100.

In the case of multi-member wards where more than one vacancy was filled we have used the vote of each party's best placed candidate in order to calculate total vote and hence party shares. Where a candidate(s) was returned unopposed then either '0' or '0.0' are used in the fields for vote, share and turnout.

Below the list of candidates is a further line of data. First, we print the name of the party whose candidate finished top of the poll at the previous election – note: the year varies according to the particular electoral cycle for that ward.

Next, is recorded the percentage turnout. Turnout is the proportion of the electorate that cast valid ballots at the election. In the overwhelming majority of cases in 2008 turnout is that given by the local Electoral Administrator and has thus been calculated knowing the number of valid ballot papers issued. In a relatively small number of cases we have ourselves calculated turnout from the available information but this year only for single member wards – turnout data for all multimember divisions/wards has been collected from Electoral Administrators. The figure to the right of the turnout represents the lead of the winning party over the second placed party in percentage terms rounded to one decimal place. The process of rounding means that in some cases the percentage majority may not be exactly the same as the winning party's vote share minus the second-placed party's share.

Candidates standing for local election use an extensive variety of party labels that now have to be officially registered with the Electoral Commission. These have been used throughout the Handbook, leading to a proliferation of party labels. These labels, and the abbreviations we have used, are described below.
