INTRODUCTION

This volume is the fourth in our series detailing the results of local elections in Scotland since 1974. The series provides an authoritative, comprehensive and easily accessible source of data on Scottish local elections since the local government system was reorganized and as such has, we believe, proved valuable to a variety of people. As the series progresses, moreover, its value increases in that it yields data which are comparable over time.

The elections we are concerned with here were held on May 1st 1980 and constituted the third round of District council elections. There are 53 such councils in Scotland and they constitute the lower tier of the Scottish local government structure.

It had been the intention of the government that between 1977 (when the second round of elections took place) and 1980 the ward boundaries of all Districts should be examined and revised by the Scottish Local Government Boundary Commission. In the event this task proved beyond the Commission and boundaries were revised in only 20 of the 53 Districts. These were as follows:

| Highland Region | Central Region |
|-------------------------|--|
| Caithness | Clackmannan |
| Sutherland | Stirling |
| Skye and Lochalsh | Falkirk |
| Inverness | |
| Badenoch and Strathspey | Borders Region |
| Nairn | Tweeddale |
| | Ettrick and Lauderdale |
| Fife Region | Berwickshire |
| North East Fife | |
| Lothian Region | Strathclyde Region |
| Edinburgh | Cunninghame |
| Midlothian | Dumfries and Galloway Region |
| | Wigtown Nithsdale |
| | Stewartry Annandale and Eskdale |

In the remaining 33 Districts there were no boundary changes, but it is anticipated that these will be revised before the next round of elections in 1984.

The fact that some Districts had ward boundaries revised has implications for our presentation and analysis of the results. In these Districts we do not indicate gains and losses and we do not present a table summarising gains and losses for the country as a whole since it might be misleading. Moreover we do not include, as we have on previous occasions, an appendix listing seats which changed hands. Ward boundary changes do not inhibit

District level comparisons but where we wish to undertake ward-level analysis, we have restricted ourselves to Districts where there were no revisions and so the number of comparable wards is smaller than has been the case hitherto.

Following this introduction the book is organised in three sections. Firstly there is a commentary upon the results and an analysis of trends in District elections. Secondly the detailed results for all Districts are presented and finally there is a number of summary tables. These are directly comparable with the tables presented in previous volumes in the series.

The results were obtained directly from returning officers and their staffs and we are, once again, indebted to them for their cooperation. In the presentation of the results women candidates are identified by the prefix 'Ms' and in addition the following symbols are used:

- = Retiring councillor elected 1977
- * Retiring councillor elected at a by-election
- + Retiring councillor who has changed parties since 1977.

Where a gain is indicated this is in relation to the 1977 result and disregards by-election changes.

The abbreviations used to indicate the party affiliations of candidates are as follows:

| | | | |
|---------|--------------------------|----------|--|
| COMM | Communist | IND SN | Independent Nationalist |
| CON | Conservative | LAB | Labour |
| DEM LAB | Democratic Labour | LIB | Liberal |
| ECOLOGY | Ecology Party | MOD | Moderate |

| INDLAB | Independent Labour | RES & RA | Residents' and Ratepayers' Association |
| INDMOD | Independent Moderate | SLP | Scottish Labour Party |
| INDRP | Independent Ratepayer | SNP | Scottish National Party |

The election results have been compiled and analysed by a computer programme derived by Iain Wright. We are grateful to him and also to Moira Bell and Hugh Bochel who, between them, undertook most of the labour associated with the production of this volume. As ever, we thank Doris Tindal for her invaluable and ready help.

We have done our best to eliminate errors. For any that remain and for the interpretation of the results the responsibility is ours.

ELECTORAL TRENDS IN SCOTTISH DISTRICTS

As we noted in our introduction the elections of 1980 were the third set of Scottish District elections to be held since local government reorganisation. We now have, therefore, a set of local electoral data for directly comparable units spanning three elections and 6 years. In this section we consider the results of the 1980 elections in relation to the two previous sets of elections. We begin by focussing on four main areas - contests, candidatures, turnout and the performances of the parties - and then go on to consider in a more general way the increasingly important role played by political parties in Scottish local government.

1. Contests

The purpose of elections in democratic societies is to enable citizens to express their preferences for a particular representative or party and thus, indirectly, for an administration. When candidates are returned unopposed the purpose is, to an extent, frustrated. It may be that an incumbent or nominee is entirely satisfactory to all electors in a ward and no-one cares to oppose him or her. In these circumstances the purpose of elections would not be frustrated, but such cases must be very rare. There would seem to be two more common causes of unopposed returns. The first is a belief on the part of potential opponents that an incumbent or nominee is bound to win and that opposition is pointless, and the second is apathy or lack of motivation.

There are good grounds for believing that some candidates are unbeatable for in local as in parliamentary elections most seats are safe for one party (or individual Independent) or another. In partisan areas, however, parties and party members have incentives to contest elections which individual non-party people do not have. By forcing a contest which they may not expect to win they contest their level of support, tie down opponents' resources, exercise their electoral machine and so on. Parties weigh benefits of this kind against the costs of finding a candidate and running some sort of campaign and although in some cases they leave the seat to their opponents, generally they seek to contest as many seats as possible. In non-partisan areas, on the other hand, lacking incentives of this kind, candidates who are perceived to be unbeatable are more likely to be left unopposed. Even if it is thought an incumbent or nominee can be defeated rivals may not come forward because the costs may outweigh the potential benefits for them. The benefits of gaining council office may not be attractive enough to compensate for costs in time, energy, income and career prospects so that although electors may not be entirely satisfied with a candidate no-one is prepared to oppose him.

Table A shows the proportion of wards that have been contested in District elections since 1974. Figures are shown separately for Regions in which non-partisan politics predominate (Highland, Grampian, Borders, Dumfries and Galloway) and mainly partisan Regions (Tayside, Fife, Lothian, Central, Strathclyde).

Table A

| | 1974 | 1977 | 1980 |
|----------------------|-------------|-------------|-------------|
| | % | % | % |
| Non-partisan Regions | 57.5 | 54.5 | 40.8 |
| Partisan Regions | 89.4 | 88.4 | 89.1 |
| Total | 79.5 | 77.9 | 74.0 |

While the figure for Scotland as a whole slipped in 1980 to 74% of wards contested (itself a much higher figure than was common before local government reorganisation) this was entirely due to a decline in contests in the more non-partisan Regions. In partisan areas - because of the incentives to parties which we discussed above - the proportion of wards contested has remained remarkably stable at just under 90% of the total. It would appear that in non-partisan Regions incentives for candidates are not great and that the figure for uncontested returns will remain large as long as political party activity at local level remains limited.

The party affiliation of the candidates who have been returned unopposed at District elections is shown in Table B. In each case Independents account for more than half of uncontested wins. But the perceived unbeatability of Labour in some areas clearly disheartens opponents and results in Labour consistently having the largest number of uncontested returns among the parties.

2. Candidatures

The number of candidates put forward by each party at each District election is shown in Table C. The 1980 elections broadly witnessed a continuation of trends established in the first two elections. As before, Labour put forward the greatest number of candidates (765) and indeed there were more Labour candidates in 1980 than ever before. The Conservatives once again recorded a small increase in candidatures. Looking at the Regional figures in Summary Table 3 and 4, however, it is noticeable that the Conservatives still seem unwilling to enter the fray in the Highland, Borders and Dumfries and Galloway Regions where one suspects they would find considerable support but where they seem reluctant to break the non-partisan tradition. In these Regions in 1980 the Conservatives had a total of only 28 candidates in 245 wards. It may be that if Labour start to contest elections more widely in these areas the Conservatives will respond. The 1980 elections saw further declines in the number of Independent and Communist candidates but the SNP managed to maintain their candidatures at about the same, relatively high, level they achieved in 1977. The Liberals, while still being thin on the ground, put forward their highest number of candidates to date.

There was considerable continuity in candidatures in that 923 retiring councillors sought re-election in 1980, that is over 80% of existing councillors. (Of these, 731 - just under 80% - were successful in their bid for re-election so that there is also considerable continuity in council membership).

The proportion of women amongst candidates continued to increase in 1980. In 1974 women accounted for 14.4% of candidates, in 1977 16.3% and in 1980 this increased to 17.8%. As in 1977 the Conservatives had the highest proportion of women candidates (24.5%). In 1980 there was also an increase in the number of women candidates elected. There were 161 successful women compared with 136 in 1974 and 158 in 1977.

3. Turnout

The level of turnout at elections is frequently interpreted as an indicator of the amount of interest and concern among electors, the energy and efficiency of parties and candidates and even the health of democracy. Whatever it may indicate, however, voting is almost universally considered to be a "good thing" and low turnouts are deplored by public officials, politicians and political commentators. The overall District election turnouts are shown in Table D and figures for 1980 for each District and Region can be found in Summary Table 8.

Table D
Turnout in District Elections

| 1974 | 1977 | 1980 |
|-------------|-------------|-------------|
| 51.4 | 47.8 | 45.7 |

It would seem now that the first District elections in 1974 did not mark the beginning of a period of relatively high local election turnouts. Rather the first elections - when Regional and District councils were elected on the same day - seem to have generated an unusual amount of interest. Since then turnout has fallen closer to the level of turnout in urban areas before reorganisation. It is worth remembering, though, that many more people now vote in local elections since under the old local government system very many more seats were left uncontested, especially in rural areas.

In each year there was, of course, very considerable variation in turnout at District level. In 1980, on the one hand turnouts of less than 40% were recorded in Banff and Buchan (38.3%), Gordon (34.5%), Aberdeen (37.5%), Roxburgh (36.1%) and Annandale and Eskdale (36.0%) while on the other hand four small Districts where only a few seats were contested recorded turnouts greater than 55% - Sutherland (66.4%), Skye and Lochalsh (58.0%), Badenoch and Strathspey (56.4%) and Tweeddale (55.5%). The extent of variation in turnouts at District level has been fairly constant. The standard deviation of District turnouts (which is a measure of dispersion or variation) at the three sets of elections held so far has been 6.6, 6.9 and 6.0 respectively.

The pattern of turnout variation has also remained fairly constant. This can be measured by computing the correlation between District turnouts at successive elections. For 1974-77 the coefficient obtained is .71 while for 1977-80 it is .79. Given that in local elections there are considerable variations in candidatures and in unopposed returns from one election to the next, these figures are impressive and indicate that a pattern has been established whereby some Districts are consistently low-turnout areas while others regularly produce higher levels of participation by the electorate. A whole variety of factors might explain this - the competitiveness of the District, the relative organisational strength of the parties, social and cultural variables, even the accuracy of the electoral register upon which the returns are based. There is scope in this question for a good deal of interesting research but it is not our task to pursue it here.

Turning more specifically to turnout change between 1977 and 1980 we have seen that overall there was a decline of 2.1%. Unlike the change between 1974 and 1977, when turnout declined in all but 7 Districts, change between 1977 and 1980 was by no means uniform. In 1980 turnout increased in 18 Districts and declined in the rest. Moreover there was a marked regional difference in this. Of the 15 Districts in the Highland, Grampian and Tayside Regions which had elections 12 had increased turnouts. While the remaining six Regions all recorded a lower turnout than in 1977 (Fife -3.3%, Lothian -2.0%, Central -3.6%, Borders -1.7%, Strathclyde - 3.3% and Dumfries and Galloway -1.9%) the Northern Regions showed increases (Highland +2.0%, Grampian +1.8% and Tayside +2.5%). In it not necessarily the case, however, that there is anything specific to the 1980 elections which explains these variations. Between 1974 and 1977 in the three Northern Regions turnout declined by considerably more than average so that what may have happened in 1980 was a sort of catching-up exercise, a return to normality after an exceptionally large decline in these areas in 1977. In support of this it is worth pointing out that between 1974 and 1977 the Borders Region also had a very large decline in turnout and this time in that Region the turnout decline was smaller than elsewhere.

4. Performances of the Parties

In advance of the 1980 elections it was possible to make fairly good guesses about the outcome. In 1977 Labour had been in office nationally and the government was unpopular. In April of that year Gallup gave the Conservatives a lead of 15.5% over Labour. In 1980, however, the Conservatives were in office and it was widely expected that they would in their turn suffer from the seemingly well-established phenomenon whereby the party in office at national level loses support in local elections. The April 1980 Gallup poll recorded a Labour lead of 8½%.

More specific to Scotland, in 1977 at the time of the last District elections the SNP had been very popular. In May the Scottish System Three poll put their support at 35% of Scottish voters. From about the middle of 1977, however, the SNP began to decline in popularity. They did not do well in parliamentary by-elections, were disappointed by the Regional elections of 1978, suffered a moral defeat in the devolution referendum and did badly in the 1979 General Election when they lost all but two of their seats. By April 1980 System Three was giving the SNP only 14% of the Scottish vote. There was little doubt, then, that the 1980 elections would see Labour gains and Conservative and SNP losses, and that is, indeed, what happened.

We begin by looking at the distribution of votes in 1980 as compared with previous elections and the data are given in Table E. Detailed 1980 figures for Districts and Regions are given in Summary Tables 9 and 10.

Table E
Party Shares of the Votes

| | 1974 | 1977 | 1980 | Change |
|--------|-------------|-------------|-------------|---------------|
| | % | % | % | 1977-8 |
| Con | 26.8 | 27.2 | 24.1 | -3.1 |
| Lab | 38.4 | 31.6 | 45.4 | +13.8 |
| Lib | 5.0 | 4.0 | 6.2 | +2.2 |
| SNP | 12.4 | 24.2 | 15.5 | -8.7 |
| Comm | 1.0 | 0.7 | 0.5 | -0.2 |
| Ind | 14.1 | 9.8 | 6.7 | -3.1 |
| Others | 2.4 | 2.6 | 1.7 | -0.9 |

Interpretation of these data is not straightforward. Complications arise from the fact that they take no account of unopposed returns and problems also arise from the fact that the parties put forward varying numbers of candidates from election to election. These problems become particularly acute when analysis of trends in party support at the level of individual Districts is attempted.

At national level, despite the difficulties mentioned, the results of the 1980 elections were clear enough. The Conservatives lost support - though perhaps not as much as might have been expected - as did the Nationalists, while Labour advanced to 45.4% of the total vote. The electoral dominance of Labour in Scotland could hardly be more conclusively demonstrated. As compared with 1977 there was, on these figures, a swing of 8.5% from Conservative to Labour and a swing of 11.3% from the SNP to Labour. And even in 1977 Labour had been the largest party in terms of popular support in Scotland. The elections of 1980 saw Labour achieving their highest proportion of votes in Scottish local elections since reorganization and put them more than 20% ahead of their nearest rivals. Less striking than Labour's success, perhaps, but still worth noting in Table E is the continuing decline of Independents.

While these features of the distribution of party support are fairly clear it is important to consider changes in party support in more detail given the problems of interpretation referred to above.

The decline in the share of votes obtained by Independent candidates is to a considerable extent accounted for by the decreased number of Independent candidates and by the increasing frequency of uncontested returns in non-partisan Districts. The 'real' level of continued electoral support for Independents is concealed by the latter. For example in 1974 Independents held 160 seats in the Highland and Dumfries and Galloway Regions. In 1980 this had hardly changed and they held 158 seats. But because of the increase in uncontested returns only 27,000 votes were given to Independents in these Regions in 1980 compared with 53,000 in 1974. Nonetheless there has been a real decline in support for Independents which is a consequence of the preferences of electors for party candidates. In wards in which in successive elections Independents were opposed by candidates of one of the major parties the Independent share of the vote fell by 5.0% between 1974 and 1977 (74 wards) and by 12.6% between 1977 and 1980 (31 wards).

Table E shows that the Liberals obtained 6.2% of the total votes in 1980, their highest poll to date. But they also had more candidates than ever and so we must try to take account of this in order to see whether there was a genuine recovery by the Liberals. The analysis in this case is affected by boundary changes - especially in Edinburgh where there have been a significant number. Considering only those Districts with unchanged boundaries, however, there were 64 wards which the Liberals contested both in 1977 and 1980 and in these the Liberal vote increased from 37,300 to 48,450 an increase of almost 30%. Clearly, then, there was a real, if modest, increase in Liberal support and their increased share of the poll was not simply an artifact of increased candidatures.

When we turn to the three major parties in Scotland - Labour, the Conservatives and the SNP - there are enough wards which are comparable between 1977 and 1980 to enable us to examine the relative performances of the parties in some detail. First of all, there were 77 wards which were contested in both elections by the Conservatives and Labour only of the main parties. In these the distribution of votes was as follows:

| | 1977 | 1980 |
|-----|-------------|-------------|
| | % | % |
| Con | 54.7 | 42.1 |
| Lab | 45.3 | 57.9 |

These figures suggest that the 'real' movement from Conservative to Labour was rather greater than that suggested by the overall figures in Table E. In directly comparable wards Labour achieved a swing of 12.6%.

There were 65 comparable wards which only the Conservatives, Labour and SNP of the major parties contested in both 1977 and 1980 and in these the distribution of votes was as follows:

| | 1977 | 1980 |
|-----|-------------|-------------|
| | % | % |
| Con | 30.2 | 24.1 |
| Lab | 33.2 | 52.7 |
| SNP | 36.6 | 23.2 |

Here the Conservative to Labour swing, 12.8%, was of the same order as the straight-fight case. More significantly, perhaps, these data show that decreased support for the SNP was not produced simply by their fielding fewer candidates. The SNP share of the vote in these wards fell by 13.4%, more than double the decline experienced by the Conservatives, and the SNP to Labour swing was 16.5%.

Finally, we consider straight Labour-SNP contests. Fifty-two wards can be used for this analysis and results in them were as follows:

| | 1977 | 1980 |
|-----|-------------|-------------|
| | % | % |
| Lab | 49.3 | 65.8 |
| SNP | 50.7 | 34.2 |

The SNP actually won a bare majority of votes in these wards in 1977 but three years later they obtained just over one third, giving a swing to Labour of 16.5% which is exactly the same as the swing figure in three-party contests.

Our more detailed analysis of party support does then confirm that over Scotland as a whole the 1980 District elections saw a further reduction in support for Independents, a slight revival by the Liberals and major movements from the Conservatives and the SNP (but especially the latter) to Labour.

As we noted above any attempt to analyse patterns of change in party support at District level is bedevilled by changes in the number of candidates put forward by the parties. This can be illustrated by changes in support for the SNP. There were 14 Districts in which the number of SNP candidates increased in 1980 as compared with 1977 and in these, taken together, the SNP share of the vote declined by only 1.1% from 18.3% in 1977 to 17.2% in 1980. In contrast, in the five Districts where there was the greatest decline in the number of SNP candidates (Glasgow, Edinburgh, Hamilton, Stirling and Falkirk) the SNP share of the total vote slumped from 30.3% in 1977 to 14.7% in 1980.

Despite effects of this kind the extent to which all Districts displayed similar voting trends is striking. If we consider Districts in Tayside, Fife, Lothian, Central and Strathclyde plus Aberdeen (33 Districts in all) then all with the exception of Angus showed a swing from Conservative to Labour and all except Angus and North East Fife swung from the SNP to Labour. There was of course some variation in the size of these swings but that is only to be expected given variations in candidatures. The latter also accounts for the unusual result in Angus (SNP candidates increased from 6 to 16) while in North East Fife the Liberals were the major beneficiaries of the decline in support for the Conservatives.

Even at ward level there is, in the cases of the Conservative and Labour parties, evidence of considerable uniformity of movements in party support. If we take the 65 wards which all three major parties contested both in 1977 and 1980 and correlate the shares of the vote each obtained in each ward then we find a correlation of .97 for the Conservative vote, .88 for the Labour vote and .54 for the SNP vote. The lower correlation in the case of the SNP confirms our previous analyses of Scottish local elections and indicates that the SNP vote is more susceptible to very local influences than is the case with the other two parties.

Parties and candidates do not, of course, contest elections in order to allow political scientists to analyse voting patterns. Their primary purpose is to seek to win seats in order to control the affairs of local areas and to implement their own policies. Table F shows the total number of seats won by the various parties and groups in the three sets of District elections that have been held so far.

Not surprisingly, Labour emerged as by far the largest party in 1980, easily exceeding even their 1974 performance. The Liberals made slight progress from 1977 but both the Conservatives and the SNP are now weaker in terms of District council seats than they have ever been. Because so many Independents are returned unopposed, their decline in terms of seats is not as marked as their decline in terms of votes.

At District level the gains and losses of seats had major implications for political control of the authorities. The 1980 elections resulted in Labour having clear control of 24 Districts which contained 66% of the Scottish electorate, Independents controlling 20 (14% of the electorate) and the Conservatives having just 5 Districts containing 6% of the electorate. The SNP lost all 8 Districts where they had previously formed the administration and the Liberals lost Inverclyde. The pattern of party control is now as follows:

1. Majority Labour control (24)

| | | |
|--------------|-----------------------|-----------------------|
| Aberdeen | Falkirk | Hamilton |
| Dundee | Dumbarton | East Kilbride |
| Kirkcaldy | Glasgow | Renfrew |
| Dunfermline | Clydebank | Inverclyde |
| West Lothian | Strathkelvin | Cunninghame |
| Midlothian | Cumbernauld & Kilsyth | Kilmarnock & Loudoun |
| East Lothian | Monklands | Kyle & Carrick |
| Clackmannan | Motherwell | Cumnock & Doon Valley |

2. Majority Conservative control (5)

| | |
|-----------------|-----------------------|
| Perth & Kinross | Bearnsden & Milngavie |
| North East Fife | Eastwood |
| Berwickshire | |

3. Majority Independent control (20)

| | | |
|-----------------|-----------------------|----------------------|
| Caithness | Badenoch & Strathspey | Tweeddale |
| Sutherland | Nairn | Ettrick & Lauderdale |
| Ross & Cromarty | Moray | Roxburgh |
| Skye & Lochalsh | Banff & Buchan | Argyll & Bute |
| Lochaber | Gordon | Wigtown |
| Inverness | Kincardine & Deeside | Stewartry |
| | | Nithsdale |
| | | Annandale & Eskdale |

4. No overall control (minority/coalition administration in brackets) (4)

| | |
|-----------------|---------------------|
| Angus (Con/Ind) | Stirling (Lab) |
| Edinburgh (Con) | Lanark (Ind/Others) |

What explains the outcome of the 1980 District elections? As we have stressed, the striking thing about the results is the extent to which they were similar from District to District. There is no evidence, at least in the partisan Districts, of local issues having any decisive impact or of any particular administration being clearly rewarded or punished by its electors. During the election campaign newspaper and television journalists argued that the rates issue would be important. We can find no consistent evidence, however, that the amount by which rates went up or which party put them up had any significant impact upon the election results. The main issue, as ever in local elections, was the performance of the national government. The Conservatives were in office; unemployment in Scotland (as elsewhere) was increasing; inflation continued apace. These factors made it certain that the Conservatives would lose ground. For reasons which are not so clear the SNP was losing popularity generally and had been for almost two years. Having done spectacularly well in 1977 they too were bound to come a cropper in these elections and they did.

5. The advance of party politics

In our volume dealing with the results of the 1977 District elections we discussed Scottish local government in the light of two competing models of local politics - a 'party government' model and a 'consensus politics' model. On the basis of the first two sets of elections we sought to locate Scottish Districts on an imaginary continuum running from purely non-partisan (consensus) politics to purely partisan local politics. Our analysis suggested that the Districts could be divided into three main groups. We identified 26 partisan Districts (that is those dominated by parties), 13 non-partisan Districts (dominated by Independents) and 14 intermediate Districts. Since then we have undertaken more sophisticated analyses and also incorporated the results of the 1980 elections.

On this basis our current categorisation is that there are now 14 Districts that should be described as non-partisan. These Districts contain only 8.5% of Scottish electors and they are Caithness, Sutherland, Ross & Cromarty, Skye & Lochalsh, Badenoch & Strathspey, Nairn, Moray, Kincardine & Deeside, Tweeddale, Ettrick & Lauderdale, Argyll & Bute, Wigtown, Stewartry and Annandale & Eskdale. Seven Districts, comprising 7.1% of the electorate should now be classed as intermediate in their forms of local politics. These are Lochaber, Inverness, Gordon, Banff & Buchan, Roxburgh, Lanark and Nithsdale. The remaining 32 Districts now have partisan local politics and contain 84.4% of Scottish electors.

This increased politicisation of local government was to an extent predictable given the structural changes made in the local government system under reorganisation. Although it is something that is sometimes deplored by editors of local newspapers and 'men in the street' the choice is ultimately made by electors and by their actions (or inaction) in becoming candidates and in voting, electors seem increasingly to prefer a party system at local level. One consequence of this, however, is that local elections have become increasingly 'nationalised'. That is to say that local elections are not verdicts upon the tenure of office of local parties nor do they act as mechanisms for making local administrations responsive. Rather, local elections constitute a verdict upon the government in office at national level. Somewhat depressingly for local parties and councillors elected in 1980, their chances of re-election in 1984 will depend to a large extent not upon their own efforts or their record in office but upon the popularity of the government of the day.
