Introduction

There are no substantial changes in format between this and previous editions of Scottish Regional Elections. The tables in the text do vary from time to time as interests and events demand, but the Summary Tables and Appendices are comparable from one election to another. It might, however, be helpful for new readers to recap on some of the conventions (or idiosyncracies) that feature in these reports.

1. It will have been noted that the Regions are not listed in alphabetical order. We have, since the first publication, followed a Scottish Office ordering of the Regions in what is a rough geographical North to South sequence. Although there are some advantages in alphabetical order the virtue of consistency has led us to retain the original form.

2. Our Summary Tables report the results in the Regions and exclude the three Islands Areas authorities. The main reason for this was that these Areas were almost entirely Independent in electoral competition and composition; in addition they are, unlike the Regions, all-purpose authorities. Partisanship may eventually increase to such an extent that we shall have to include the Islands in our analysis.

3. As usual, we have grouped no label, variously labelled Independents (except INDLAB, INDCON, INDNAT and INDLIB), and 'non-political' candidates as Independents. We have also rationalised the variety of anti-poll tax labels under APT. In cases where the candidates have claimed to be party candidates of any kind we have treated them as such.

The various incarnations of the political centre in recent years have posed some problems for us. In 1986 we attempted to distinguish between Liberals and the SDP as well as treating their Alliance as a whole. Changes since the 1987 general election, the dissolution of the Alliance and the merger of the two parties have meant that some former SDP councillors have now appeared as SLD candidates. On this occasion we have treated SDP held seats that now have an SLD councillor (sometimes the same person as held it for the former) as SLD gains from SDP. But in calculating SLD vote changes we have compared their status in 1990 with that of the Alliance in 1986. We have had some problems in identifying 'continuing' Liberals because even the official party candidates are inconsistent in their labelling. We offer our apologies to any whom we may have misdescribed. All the main parties except Labour usually have Scottish in their labels. Indeed, it should be noted that the usual label SLD stands for Scottish Liberal Democrats—only a handful of candidates described themselves as Social and Liberal Democrats, but there were also Liberal Democrats, Liberal Democrat Focus Team and so on. We have included them all under the conveniently ambiguous SLD label.

There were also some surprising variations in Conservative descriptions; a relatively small number of candidates described themselves simply as Conservatives. Most, outside of Strathclyde, used the label Scottish Conservative, but a large number in the West of Scotland called themselves Scottish Conservative and Unionist candidates. The SNP candidates differed only in the additions they made to their labels. There was a great variety of such additions, usually referring to the poll tax, such as 'Scottish National Party —No Poll tax' or even 'Nae Poll Tax', or 'No Warrant Sales', but there was also a sprinkling of 'Independence in Europe' additions. The Greens too, especially in Strathclyde, added to their Scottish Green title in such ways as 'Politics for Life', 'Against Glasgow's Motorways' and there were also anti poll tax slogans. Whether these additions, which appear on the ballot paper, have any impact at all on the way people vote is an interesting question.

4. Gains and losses indicated are in relation to the results in 1986 and disregard by-election changes and changes of party by councillors.

5. Women candidates are identified with the prefix Ms and the following symbols are used in the presentation of the results:

- = Retiring councillor elected in 1986
- * Retiring councillor elected at a by-election since May 1986
- + Retiring councillor who has changed parties since May 1986
- Retiring councillor standing in another or a new division

6. The abbreviations used for party affiliations in tables and results are as follows:

APT	Anti poll tax
COMM	Communist
CPGB	Communist Party of Great Britain
CON	Conservative
GREEN	Scottish Green
IND	Independent
INDLAB	Independent Labour
INDLIB	Independent Liberal
INDSN	Independent Scottish Nationalist
LAB	Labour
LIB	Liberal
SLD	Scottish Social and Liberal Democrat
SNP	Scottish National
SDP	Social Democrat
SRS	Scottish Republican Socialist
SSM	Student Show Mounthooly
SSP	Scottish Socialist
WRAG	Wishaw Ratepayers' Action Group

There were only very minor boundary changes for this election. These have not been indicated because they had no electoral significance.

Commentary

Throughout the 1980s the Labour party utterly dominated Scottish electoral politics at every level. In the general elections of 1983 and 1987 they won respectively 42 and 50 of the 72 Scottish seats (the remainder being distributed among the Conservatives, the Alliance parties and the SNP). In the 1989 European election Labour took seven of the eight Euro constituencies (the other went to the SNP). In Regional and District council elections Labour were consistently and overwhelmingly the largest party in terms of votes and seats, and they permanently controlled local authorities covering the great majority of the Scottish population. From time to time the other parties rejoiced in local by-election gains from Labour and much was made of the SNP gain of the safe Parliamentary seat of Glasgow Govan in a by-election in 1988. But these proved false dawns and nothing that the 'opposition' parties could do seemed to impinge on Labour's apparent invincibility.

For the Conservatives in Scotland the 1980s were electorally disastrous. Having won a majority of Parliamentary seats and over 50 per cent of the votes as recently as 1955, they began the 1980s with 22 seats and 31.4 per cent of the votes and ended them with only 10 seats and 24 per cent of the votes. At the start of the decade they held 365 Regional and District council seats (out of 1555) and by its end they had declined to 228 (out of 1600). In 1989 the Tories lost their two remaining European constituencies with only 20.9 per cent of the vote and a Labour MP was able to declare (with pardonable exaggeration) that in one respect at least Scotland was a 'Tory-free zone'.

In the run up to the Regional elections of May 1990, the first nation-wide test of party support in the new decade, there were few, if any, indications that the position was about to change significantly. Despite its loss to the SNP of Glasgow Govan and an apparent consequential set-back in Scottish opinion polls, Labour quickly recovered and reasserted its dominant position. In the first three months of 1990 the System Three poll which is reported regularly in the Glasgow Herald, put Labour 29, 27, and 31 points ahead of their nearest rival. For the first time in some years Scottish opinion did not appear to be at variance with the rest of the UK as national opinion polls began to register large Labour leads.

It is dangerous to be dogmatic about the reasons for Labour's revival in England, but widespread hostility to the poll tax, suspicions about radical changes in the National Health Service and deteriorating economic indicators certainly eroded the popularity of the government. Coincidentally, Mrs Thatcher's personal standing plummeted. Just before the Regional elections, Conservative morale and standing in Scotland were further damaged by the Chancellor of the Exchequer's concession to poll tax payers in England and Wales in his budget speech. These concessions, which did not extend to Scotland, seemed to demonstrate once again the Tory government's insensitivity to Scottish opinion and needs, and also suggested that the Secretary of State for Scotland, Malcolm Rifkind, had not had an eye on Scottish interests. The storm that followed this part of the budget speech persuaded Mr Rifkind to make representations to the Cabinet and it was reported that he threatened to resign if the concessions were not extended to Scotland. The government agreed to the extension, but it emerged that no new money would be forthcoming for the purpose and that payment would come from the existing Scottish Office vote.

These factors and others, along with continuing resentment towards the year-old poll tax, made the ambitions of the Conservatives to engineer a revival of their fortunes in Scotland difficult to achieve. This effort had been going on for some time. Following their poor performance in the 1987 general election they had drastically overhauled their central organisation in Scotland. They also tried to reinvigorate their local associations and one product of this was that they were able to put forward a record number of candidates in the 1988 District elections. None of this helped their electoral fortunes in the short term, for they emerged from these elections with their lowest ever share of the votes and with their lowest ever number of councillors. Between 1988 and 1990 the Conservative propaganda offensive in Scotland shifted up a gear, but there were still no concessions to majority Scottish sentiment and the line that Thatcherism was beneficial and highly relevant to Scotland and was, indeed, congruent with traditional Scottish values was vigorously pursued. The appointment of Michael Forsyth, a noted right wing radical and self confessed sycophant of Mrs Thatcher, as Scottish Conservative party chairman in the autumn of 1989 emphasised this posture. Forsyth led an even more aggressive campaign for the regional elections. He set up in the Scottish Central Office a monitoring unit which publicised the iniquities of Labour controlled local authorities, in among other things, sending delegations abroad on council business. A large scale advertising campaign was set in hand which attempted to exploit concern about Labour's recently announced property value based alternative to the poll tax. This proposal was not well received by the media, nor it seems by the electorate, and it was not well presented. Details of its operation had clearly not been worked out and there was no hint of its likely financial impact on individuals. It was quickly dubbed the 'roof tax' by Labour's opponents and the party suffered an uncomfortable few weeks after its publication; in their posters the Tories goaded Donald Dewar (Labour's shadow Scottish Secretary) asking 'Donald where's yer figures?'. They also exploited an apparent difference on a poll tax alternative between the Labour party nationally and the party in Scotland. For once the Conservatives thought that they had the initiative in the campaign. Malcolm Rifkind claimed that his party had Labour 'on the rack' over the issue (Scotsman 1-5-90), and Michael Forsyth predicted that they would increase their votes and their number of seats in the elections (Scotsman 24-4-90). If the poll tax was the dominant issue at the 1988 District elections would the roof tax take its place in 1990?

The 1980s had ended on a note of optimism for the SNP. After set-backs in the first half of the decade their share of the votes consistently improved. In the 1986 Regional and 1988 District elections they advanced to second place in share of the votes, but remained third to the Conservatives in seats won. Nineteen eighty-eight also saw the SNP capture the safe Labour seat of Govan in spectacular style in a by-election. But predictions at the time that this presaged a significant breakthrough in Labour territory were premature. There was, immediately following the by-election, the normal 'afterglow' effect in the polls and this lasted until the 1989 European elections when the party achieved its best performance (25.6 per cent of the vote) in a Scottish-wide election since the October 1974 general election. Although the SNP came second in share of the votes it did not add to its one European seat. Thereafter support for the SNP in the polls gradually fell until it reached a more 'normal', but unspectacular level. Labour's improved showing in the rest of Britain was disadvantageous to the SNP, part of whose case rested on the alleged waste of voting Labour in Scotland because that party was unelectable on a national basis. When Labour appeared to be a credible party of government again this argument fell. Nonetheless, the SNP entered the Regional elections expecting to do well. They campaigned strongly on the poll tax, asserting that Labour had betrayed the Scottish people by its allegedly weak stance on the issue and advocating a campaign of civil disobedience through non-payment of the tax.

In contrast to the optimism enjoyed by the SNP, the continuing SDP had been reduced to a tiny rump in Scotland and the Scottish Liberal Democrats, still suffered from the relative failure of the party to make an impact nationally, having obtained a miserable 4.3 per cent of the vote in the European elections in Scotland (less than the Greens). For the SLD it was once more a case of gritting their teeth and trying to hang on as a significant electoral force in Scotland.

The Outcome

Turnout

Overall turnout in the Regional elections increased slightly from 45.6 per cent to 45.9 per cent. On a Regional basis increases were particularly large in Grampian (+4.7 per cent) where the highly marginal nature of the council was well publicised, and in Borders (+5.4 per cent) and Dumfries and Galloway (+3.7 per cent); in these two cases we suspect that increased party intervention was instrumental in bringing greater numbers of voters to the polls. Elsewhere turnout change compared with 1986 was very slight. Despite showing a sharp increase, Grampian had the lowest turnout of any region (as it has had in every Regional election) whilst Lothian had the highest turnout for the third election in succession and was the only Region to exceed 50 per cent on this occasion. (See Summary Table 8)

Patterns of Party Support

Table A compares the distribution of votes at the 1990 elections with that in the last Regional elections in 1986. Figures are shown separately for 'partisan' Regions (Grampian, Tayside, Fife, Lothian, Central and Strathclyde) which together comprise about 91 per cent of the Scottish electorate, and for the 'Non-partisan' Regions of Highland, Borders and Dumfries and Galloway where Independents predominate.

Table A: Party Shares of Votes in Regional Elections 1986–1990

	Partisan Regions		Non-Partisan Regions		Total
	1986 %	1990 %	1986 %	1990 %	1986 %	1990 %
Con	17.3	20.0	9.6	12.5	16.9	19.6
Lab	45.6	44.6	12.1	12.3	43.9	42.7
SNP	18.6	22.2	11.5	16.2	18.2	21.8
All/SLD	15.5	8.4	7.1	11.6	15.1	8.7

Ind	2.0	2.0	59.2	43.2	4.8	4.5
Other	0.6	0.9	0.5	0.8	0.6	0.9

As can be seen, the Conservatives did indeed increase their share of the votes in partisan Regions and in Scotland as a whole. Labour's share declined slightly, but it still won by far the largest proportion of the votes—almost twice as large as its nearest rival, the SNP. The latter very clearly improved on its 1986 performance and once again came second in terms of popular support. The SLD share of the votes in partisan Regions was only just over half of that of the Alliance in 1986.

In non-partisan Regions the most notable change was the slump in support for Independent candidates. A fall of 16 percentage points resulted in Independents obtaining less than 50 per cent of the votes for the first time; all of the political parties made gains in these Regions.

Changes in party support in the individual Regions are summarised in Table B. The figures in this table show that the Conservatives advanced in all regions except Grampian.

Table B: Change in Party Votes in Regions 1986–1990

	Con	Lab	SNP	All/SLD	Ind
Grampian	-4.0	0	+10.5	-8.7	+1.3
Tayside	+1.5	-0.8	+3.0	-4.8	-1.4
Fife	+2.3	-0.8	-3.0	-0.4	+0.7
Lothian	+2.3	+0.4	+5.6	-8.9	-0.8
Central	+7.3	-2.7	-4.6	-2.5	+1.2
Strathclyde	+3.5	-0.3	+3.8	-8.4	-0.8
Highland	+0.6	-2.6	+5.4	+3.2	+1.2
Borders	+5.0	+3.1	+0.6	+16.0	-24.4
Dumfries & Galloway	+1.1	+1.4	+6.8	-5.9	-5.0
TOTAL	+2.7	-1.2	+3.6	-6.4	-0.3

Their improvement seems particularly impressive in Central (which contains Michael Forsyth's constituency), but they also more than doubled their number of candidates in this Region (from 11 to 26) whilst the other parties had the same number as in 1986.

Although Labour's share was down in four partisan Regions the decline was marginal and, with the exception of Central, was very close to the 1986 level. Fife was the only Region in which the SLD held on to its share of the votes, but this relatively good performance was, at least in part, a function of an increased number of candidates (+7). The reverse side of the coin for the SLD can be seen in Lothian and Strathclyde where a significant decline in the number of candidates (-8 and -42 respectively) was accompanied by a large drop in vote shares. Similarly the falls in the SNP share in Fife and Central, and their strong advance in Grampian are partly attributable to changes in the number of candidates they put forward.

Immediately after the elections Conservative spokesmen were quick to claim that the results vindicated their pre-election confidence and that they were clearly 'on the way back' in Scotland. It is true that they increased their share of the votes to 19.6 per cent (+2.7 per cent) in Scotland as a whole, but this was only 0.1 per cent greater than the level of support they achieved in the 1988 District elections. Moreover, as we suggested earlier, a good part of this 'progress' was the result of the increased number of candidates put forward. A more accurate measure of trends in party support can be obtained if we compare cases in which the choices given to voters were the same at two successive elections; in this way we can control for changes in candidate numbers. There were 108 electoral divisions which were contested by all of the four main parties in both 1986 and 1990, and Table C shows, in the first place, how the parties performed in these divisions taken together.

Table C: Party Support in Four-Party Divisions 1986–1990

	Con %	Lab %	SNP %	All/SLD %
All divisions
1986	23.7	41.4	12.9	22.0
1990	26.3	42.7	17.8	13.2
Lab held (65)
1986	15.6	53.2	14.2	17.0
1990	16.9	54.6	20.3	8.2
Con held (29)
1986	43.3	21.0	10.5	25.1
1990	48.3	25.0	14.0	12.6
Alliance held (13)
1986	24.8	20.6	9.8	44.7
1990	24.4	21.2	12.1	42.3

Again it is true that the Conservatives did increase their share of the votes (+2.6 per cent), but Labour also increased their share in the same divisions (+1.3 per cent) and any Conservative advance relative to Labour is, therefore, minuscule. Expressed as swing, the figures suggest a movement of only 0.7 per cent from Conservatives to Labour—hardly, one would have thought, a cause for rejoicing at Conservative headquarters.

A much clearer message is revealed in the cases of the SLD and the SNP. The considerable decline in support for the former and the significant increase for the latter shows that for these the impression given by the 'raw' figures in Table A is not misleading and that these changes are not accounted for by variations in the number of candidates.

The second part of Table C breaks down the original 108 electoral divisions according to which party won the seats in 1986. The Conservatives did best in seats that they already held (+5.0 per cent), but this was almost matched by an increased Labour share (+4.0 per cent) in the same seats. Labour improved on its 1986 share in its own territory (+1.4 per cent) which was slightly more than the Conservative's increase (+1.3 per cent). There were not enough SNP cases to allow a similar analysis for them, but it can be seen that they made most progress (+6.1 per cent) in Labour seats although they advanced in seats held by the other parties too. The SLD lost most ground in Conservative held seats (-12.5 per cent), but they also suffered a substantial set back in Labour held divisions (-8.8 per cent); they did relatively well, however, (-2.4 per cent) in seats that they already held. This apparent consolidation of strength in the parties' own territories is an interesting phenomenon; it is unclear on the available evidence whether incumbency of itself gives an advantage or whether parties successfully targeted their campaign effort to exploit existing support.

There is one further set of electoral divisions not shown in Table C which is worth analysing in a little detail. These are what might be called 'Alliance withdrawals', that is divisions which all four main parties contested in 1986, but in which there was no SLD candidates in 1990. There were 45 such divisions and the greatest beneficiary of these withdrawals seems to have been the SNP (+6.7 per cent) although the Conservatives (+2.3 cent) and Labour (+1.1 cent) also recorded increases in support. It is impossible to be sure, however, whether these gains came directly from former Alliance voters.

Council Seats Won

Although much is made by parties and the media of the shares of the votes obtained in local elections such an emphasis does little to promote the importance of local government. The results of these elections have considerable direct effects on the populations of each local authority area. It is necessary, therefore, to give attention to how trends in party choice amongst voters are translated into Regional council seats and actual party control of councils. Table D does the former, distinguishing again between partisan and non-partisan Regions.

Table D: Regional Council Seats Won 1986-90

	Partisan Regions		Non-Partisan Regions		Total
	1986	1990	1986	1990	1986	1990
Con	57	48	8	4	65	52
Lab	209	213	14	20	223	233
SNP	27	34	9	8	36	42
SLD	31	29	9	11	40	40
Green	—	—	—	1	—	1
Ind	10	9	69	64	79	73
Other	1	2	1	2	2	4
TOTAL	335	335	110	110	445	445

In partisan Regions Labour recorded yet another increase, taking their tally of seats to 213, four and a half times as many as their nearest rivals, the Conservatives. The latter actually lost 13 seats in Scotland and were reduced to their lowest ever total. Such a result again sits oddly with Conservative claims of an electoral comeback. The Conservatives' worst result came in Grampian where they lost six seats and came fourth in the number of councillors elected. This was the only Region in which the Conservative share of the votes actually fell, but it was also a Region that they controlled until 1986. Although the SNP came a clear second in share of the votes in partisan Regions, their count of seats did not reflect this achievement; a net gain of six seats, most of them in Grampian seems a poor reward. In contrast, the SLD which lost quite heavily in share of the votes, but performed best (or least poorly) where they had some previous strength, ended up with a net loss of only two seats in the partisan Regions and with no change over Scotland as a whole.

In non-partisan Regions the number of Independent councillors fell yet again and Labour made advances, particularly in Highland (+3) and Dumfries and Galloway (+3).

The various gains and losses of seats in partisan Regions did not result in any changes in party control of Regional councils. Labour remains the majority party in Fife, Lothian, Central and Strathclyde and is again the largest party (although without a majority) in Grampian and Tayside where it runs minority administrations. Thus Labour either controls or administers on an understanding with other parties all of the partisan Regions in Scotland. Independents are still the largest group in each of the non-partisan Regions, but the Independents effectively lost control of Dumfries and Galloway as a result of post election 'arrangements' amongst the parties there.

Minor Parties and Others (See Summary Table 12)

The most striking development in 1990 amongst the minor parties was the progress made by the Green party. In 1986 the Greens fielded 69 candidates who between them mustered 8,427 votes. On this occasion they had 118 candidates (including 42 in Strathclyde where they had only seven in 1986), and obtained just over 35,000 votes—by far the highest for a 'minor' party in Regional elections. This result was not nearly so good as that sensationally obtained in the European elections the year before, but some compensation was obtained by the symbolically important gain of their first seat in Scottish local government from a sitting Independent in Highland.

Two factions of the Communist party participated in the elections, but there was still a further decline in the number of candidates and in votes won. The Communists did, however, manage to retain the one seat that they have held (in Fife) with the same candidate, since 1974. The eight 'continuing' SDP candidates were concentrated in just two areas and, presumably, will not reappear.

Trends in Regional Elections

Candidates and Contests

A record number of 1515 candidates contested the 1990 Regional elections. Details for 1986 and 1990 are shown in Table E. In partisan Regions there was a major increase in the number of Conservatives (+51) and further small increases by Labour and the SNP (+14 and +6 respectively). Both Labour and the SNP contested more than 92 per cent of the seats in partisan areas and the Conservatives were not far behind (87 per cent). This is a very impressive rate of participation and it is difficult to envisage much improvement by these parties. Most candidates fight seats that they know they cannot win; for most of them the rewards are purely psychic and there must be limits to the numbers prepared to come forward. Only the SLD fielded fewer candidates (-41) and it is likely that they will make strenuous efforts to improve on this showing. They had particularly poor slates of candidates in Central (six candidates for 34 seats) and they had no candidates at all in four Strathclyde Districts (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth, Monklands, Motherwell and Cumnock and Doon Valley). Overall the decline in the number of SLD candidates was compensated by an increase of 40 in the number of Green candidates.

Table E: Party of Candidates 1986–1990

TOTAL	1198	1282	192	233	1390	1515

In non-partisan areas the number of Independent candidates fell by 13 and the major parties increased their presence. The Conservatives mounted a particularly strong challenge in Borders where they contested 19 of the 23 seats (but emerged with fewer seats). Labour increased its candidatures modestly in all three of these Regions, but it was the SNP which made the greatest effort amongst the parties with 35 candidates. Slowly but inexorably, it seems, the non-partisan nature of these Regions is being eroded as the percentage of candidates who are Independents has fallen from almost 70 per cent in 1974 to 45 per cent in 1990, and the proportion of council seats won by Independents has fallen from 79 per cent to 58 per cent.

Over Scotland as a whole, the Conservatives, Labour, the SNP and the Greens put forward a record number of candidates.

Table F shows the percentage of divisions contested in Regional elections since 1974. Uncontested elections are now very much a rarity in partisan areas and, indeed there was only one such case (in Fife) in 1990. The increased participation of the parties in non-partisan Regions produced a relatively high proportion of contested elections there. Just over 66 per cent of the seats were contested, the biggest proportion since the first flurry of interest after reorganisation in 1974.

Table F: Percentage of Contested Divisions 1974–1990

Trends in Party Competition

The developing nature of electoral competition in Regional elections is illustrated in Tables G and H.

Table G: Forms of Electoral Competition 1974–1990

*Less than one per cent.

Table G shows that in partisan Regions almost all divisions now witness a contest between at least two of the four major parties. All other forms of competition (or non-competition) which accounted for almost a quarter of divisions in the first elections after reorganisation are now, to all intents and purposes, extinct.

Change continues, however, in non-partisan Regions. In 1990 just over one third of divisions in these Regions witnessed party contests compared with only 6.7 per cent in 1978.

Table H: Forms of Party Contest in Partisan Regions 1974–1990

	1974 %	1978 %	1982 %	1986 %	1990 %

All Two-Way	61	38	20	20	11
Total Party Contests	254	279	304	321	325

As Table H shows from 1974 to 1986 there was a huge increase in the incidence of four-way contests in Regional elections in partisan areas, from just five per cent of divisions with party contests in 1974 to 51 per cent in 1986. The decline in the number of SLD candidates in 1990 reduced this slightly to 48 per cent, but the overall increase in party activity meant that the decline in the incidence of straight fights continued and these accounted for only 11 per cent of party contests in 1990. Regional elections remain highly competitive and this is a characteristic to be commended.

Women Candidates and Councillors

The slow, but consistent growth in the number of women candidates and councillors continued in 1990. Table I shows, however, that women still constitute less than a quarter of all candidates. The Labour party continues to be the most backward in the nomination of women. Although they did field more than ever before, fewer than 20 per cent of Labour candidates were women. All of the other parties had a higher proportion of female candidates than Labour. This must, or should be, an embarrassment to a party which claims to be the soundest on women's issues and professes an egalitarian philosophy. The newest of the parties, the Greens, produced the highest proportion of women candidates with 36.5 per cent. Although the proportion of candidates who were women showed a small overall increase, both the Conservatives and the SLD had a smaller proportion than in 1986.

Table I: Women Candidates 1974–1990

	1974	1978	1982	1986	1990
Number of Women candidates	139	167	224	274	323
As % of all Candidates	12.1	16.0	17.3	19.7	21.3
Number of Women Elected	44	52	56	67	72
As % of all Elected	10.2	12.1	12.7	15.1	16.2

Labour's poor record in the nomination of women did not prevent it from having more than 50 per cent of all the women regional councillors elected in 1990. Its dominant position in Scottish politics ensures that a high proportion of its women candidates are actually elected (nearly 58 per cent in 1990), but this is still significantly less than for male Labour candidates (70.6 per cent). In all parties except the SLD women are less likely to be elected than their male counterparts. We have remarked before that this has nothing to do with their merits as candidates, but has a lot to do with the seats that they have been selected to fight. It is significant that in 1990, amongst Independent candidates, who are, as it were, self-selected nearly six per cent of women candidates were elected compared with almost 55 per cent of men.
