ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

In this our seventh year of publication we have, for the first time, covered the quadrennial, all-out district elections. Whilst in many ways this marks a highpoint in our ambitions, the sheer logistics of dealing with nearly 30,000 candidates fighting for over 12,000 seats in 8,138 wards in 369 local authorities have been daunting. The whole exercise may be seen as the equivalent of recording the results of at least 12 general elections, quite apart from the complications caused by multi-member seats and the large number of 'local' parties.

More than ever this year, therefore, the Local Elections Handbook is the product of a team effort. The generous sponsorship of Local Government Chronicle has once again bought us both time and assistance, and we were further supported in the initial data entry operation by undertaking some contract research on turnout for the Department of Environment. David Cowling at ITN helped us to gather and collate the 1991 results; Rob Clements provided some crucial statistics; Alan Willis and John Woollard supplied 1987 results and checked these and much else besides; and Brian Cheal, our research assistant, and Nicki Lunn, who acted as our secretary for four months, worked tirelessly tracking down information, keeping records and overseeing the data input.

The level of cooperation we received from the local authorities was very high, and a tribute to the success of the Association of Electoral Administrators in professionalising its membership. A handful of councils, however, were reluctant to pass on information which they seemed to believe was not in the public domain, and some wanted to extract more than a nominal sum for providing it. On the whole those councils most willing to help us and most able to provide data in a clear and concise form were the ones which hold elections annually. Practice does it seems make perfect in electoral administration as in much else.

Loyal readers will notice that this year's Handbook has been entirely redesigned and published in one volume. The redesign was undertaken as a project by two typography students on the Exeter campus of Polytechnic South West, Carol Walthew and Shane Walker. Shane's design has formed the basis of the present volume, but we hope he will understand that the exigencies of time and space have meant that we have not followed his suggestions to the letter. Our colleague at Exeter, Justin Beament, supervised the students' work and has been enthusiastically involved since we took him our problems nearly two years ago!

On the computing front, John Mark has again helped us with programming; Andy McMullen has given advice and support on DTP software; and Joe Evison has, as ever, smoothed our path through innumerable personal and professional kindnesses. We should also like to thank Jill Norval of LGC Communications who has been handling distribution since 1988 and whose courtesy and efficiency will be known to many regular subscribers.

Michael Thrasher has taken the prime responsibility for turning machine-readable data into the printed page. Ruth Thrasher has, as a consequence, suffered more than usual this year from the exercise, but both she and Richenda remain unstinting in their support of our endeavours. The re-occurrence of a similar set of elections in 1995 depends on the result of the next general election and the implementation of any reforms in the structure of local government. Neither of us would be too unhappy if they didn't happen quite like this again!

INTRODUCTION

Metropolitan Borough Elections, 1991

The Metropolitan Borough elections of 1991 were something of a damp squib compared with the contests of the previous year. With the departure of Mrs Thatcher, and the injection of considerable sums of money from the Treasury, the 'poll tax' had ceased to be the all-embracing issue. Moreover, with scarcely anybody believing that John Major was likely to call a June general election, the sense of urgency on the doorsteps was less than during the general election agenda setting battles of May 1983 and 1987.

The clear victim of the less frenetic pace of politics was the level of public participation in the elections. In the metropolitan authorities as a whole, turnout slipped by over 5% compared with 1990 to 40.8% -see Table A. Only 13 individual wards had turnouts greater than 55% as against 66 wards in 1990, whilst, on the other hand, last year's lowest turnout of 29.3% in Elswick, Newcastle-upon-Tyne was 'beaten' no less than 45 times. Stockport, Bury and Wirral once again topped the turnout league, but there was no authority with a borough-wide turnout above 50%. With politics in Bradford having gone somewhat off the boil since 1990, turnout dropped by an above average 8.3%. The 'wooden spoon' this year was taken by Rotherham (33.1%) with Sunderland (33.7%) not far behind.

The lower turnout did not, however, mean that there was no interesting political dimension to the results. The Conservatives slightly (759 compared with 731) and the Liberal Democrats markedly (590 to 516) contested more wards than in 1990, and this resulted in a reduction in the number of uncontested seats and a rise in the proportion of three-party contests. The total number of candidates dropped very slightly, but there was a further increase both in the number of women candidates and in the number of women elected to the highest we have yet recorded. Of the 191 who were successful, 50 were Conservatives, 102 Labour, and 34 Liberal Democrats -together with the sole SDP councillor elected in the metropolitan boroughs.

In terms of their electoral performance each of the parties can, with some justice, claim a degree of satisfaction. Labour once again easily topped the poll, but failed to repeat its achievement of both 1988 and 1990 in taking more than 50% of the vote. Compared with 1987 Labour's vote increased by 2.5% and the party won 27 more wards than it had then. Labour will not, however, be happy with its performance in some regions. On Merseyside, the Independent Labour candidates in Liverpool resulted in the party gaining its lowest share of the vote there for a decade, and Labour was actually behind the Tories in the West Midlands - an area where Labour support has become less solid over recent years. In the boroughs, Labour's improvement compared with 1987 allowed it to add Wirral to the 31 out of 36 metropolitan authorities it already controlled, even though it suffered a slight fall in share of the vote on the peninsula.

The Conservatives lost 45 wards compared with 1987 despite their share of the vote holding constant. They, however, will have been pleased that this year their vote was up 5% from its nadir at the 1990 'poll tax' election, and that on a much lower turnout a greater number of metropolitan electors voted for them. Whereas Labour finds it difficult to gain control of additional boroughs, the Conservatives have very little room to fall further. Their vote in the West Midlands as a whole improved noticeably on 1990 (with four seats being gained from Labour in Sandwell), but a single loss to each of their rival parties saw them lose overall control in Solihull. In Liverpool and South Tyneside no Conservative councillors at all were elected even though the party polled over 10% of the vote, and in several cities Tory representation on the council is now in single figures.

The surprise package of the 1991 elections were the Liberal Democrats. Both their level of contestation and steady support in the opinion polls gave notice that the party had recovered from the trauma of merger in 1988, but few expected them to win more wards in the metropolitan boroughs even than they had managed during the heydays of the Alliance. In both 1988 and 1990 their share of vote had fallen quite sharply compared with the elections four years previously, and they had suffered a net loss of seats. This year they were fighting seats gained in the buoyant election year of 1987 when they had polled 23.8% of the vote and won 101 wards. A similar decline was widely expected, but although their vote was down by 5% on 1987 it was also up by the same margin on 1988 and 1990. What is more the Liberal Democrats so successfully concentrated on their areas of strength that they retained the majority of what they already held and added to these seats by recording a small advantage on the carousel of gains and losses. They topped the poll in Stockport and, aided by the splits in the Labour party, in Liverpool, and gained useful ground in self-proclaimed target authorities such as Oldham, Rochdale and St Helens. Elsewhere, both Labour and the Conservatives showed a positive increase in vote since 1987 as a result of a fall off in Liberal Democrat performance and contestation. This was perhaps most noticeable in Calderdale, where the Liberal Democrats contested only 7 seats and slumped to just 15% of the vote in a borough which houses the Association of Liberal Democrat Councillors.

English and Welsh District Elections, 1991

For the first time this year we have been able to compile English and Welsh district council election results for that stage of the electoral cycle when those authorities which have opted for 'all-out' elections go to the polls. As such, the comparisons we are able to make with the results of previous elections will be limited and must be treated with caution. We do, however, now have some basic data from 1987 for England, together with the ability to compare with 1988 and 1990 the results from those authorities with annual elections. In each case it should be borne in mind that the wards contributing to the overall local authority aggregation are not necessarily exactly the same.

For both England and Wales the 1991 elections provide some fascinating information about the state of local democracy. On the one hand, a far greater proportion of wards were uncontested than in London, the metropolitan boroughs or the generally more urban districts with annual elections; on the other hand, the level of turnout in contested wards (48.1%) was within half a point of the level reached in any tier of local government in the bitter 'poll tax' local elections of 1990. Moreover, this was achieved despite turnout actually falling back compared with 1990 (48.6% to 44.1%) in those councils holding elections both this year and last.

This is all not as contradictory as it seems, and perhaps contains a lesson for would be reformers of local government. Seats in small wards in rural areas are, unsurprisingly, those least likely to be contested. However, when more candidates than there are vacancies do present themselves, the electorate in these same areas seem keen to use their vote, not least one suspects from a sense of identity with the geography of the ward and a desire to support an individual candidate as its representative. This phenomenon is especially noticeable in Wales where in large tracts of the country there are either no elections at all or scattered contests attracting very high rates of participation.

The propensity to vote is perhaps also increased by having elections just once in every four years. For example, the turnout in London is consistently higher than that in the metropolitan boroughs whenever their elections coincide, whereas at both the 1983 and 1987 general elections a smaller proportion of the electorate voted in London than in any metropolitan 'county' area. The differences in 1991 turnouts between 'all-out' and 'thirds' authorities may themselves reflect the greater salience of being able to re-elect or throw out an entire council at periodic intervals. In view of this it is not surprising to discover that the highest average turnouts were in two districts with quadrennial elections, Derbyshire Dales (59.2%) and East Devon (58.7%), and the lowest in Kingston-upon-Hull (27.8%) and Stoke-on-Trent (34.7%) which hold annual contests.

Variations in party competition between different authorities are, however, much more directly a function of population density. Less than 5% of district wards were uncontested in either 1988 or 1990, but this year one in eight wards in England and almost two in five wards in Wales required no election. Similarly, whereas there was a contest between all three major parties in about 60% of the wards in 1988 and 1990, in May 1991 only 2647 out of 6417 wards in England (41%) were fought by Conservatives, Labour and the Liberal Democrats. In Wales, the number of such contests was 70 (7.8%) and the figure reduces even further to just 11 if Plaid Cymru are also taken into account.

The more urban nature of those councils with annual elections can, finally, be gauged from a comparison of vote share in both 1987 and 1991 -see Tables E and F. Although the Conservatives and the then Alliance obtained very similar shares of the vote in 1987 in authorities with annual elections and in the English districts as a whole, the position of Labour was reversed. Whereas the party came second with almost 30% where there were elections by thirds, the party's overall share of the vote of 23.7% left it in third place. In 1991, there was again little to distinguish the performance of Tories and Liberal Democrats in the two types of district, but Labour polled 8% better where there were annual elections.

TABLE E: Party performance in 1987 and 1991 - English Districts only

	%vote share		Wards contested		Wards won
	1987	1991	1987	1991	1987	1991

Labour	23.7	27.9	4541	4577	1175	1505
Alliance/LD	27.2	22.7	4588	3698	985	1220

The overall results of the 1991 district elections brought mixed fortunes for the parties. The Conservatives won 500 fewer wards and lost about 1000 seats compared with 1987, and saw control of 40 councils slip from their grasp. Their one consolation was that they seemed to recover about half the vote they shed between 1987 and the poll tax debacle of 1990. In individual authorities, their best performances came where there was a fall off since 1987 in support for either the erstwhile Alliance or Independent candidates. Some of their worst results were, to be fair, the product of changing patterns of contestation rather than simple loss of support. However, a 20% drop in their vote in West Oxfordshire demonstrates the continuing fall-out from the 'poll tax' controversy in that area, and they were similarly hurt by adverse publicity in West Wiltshire.

Labour, conversely, did rather less well than in 1990, but much better than in 1987. Their mark of particular satisfaction will be to have regained second place in the English shires from the Liberal Democrats. A continuing solid performance in, for example, Ipswich, Slough, Thamesdown (Swindon) and Thurrock should encourage them that some of their easier parliamentary targets in the South of England may now be in the bag regardless of the actual outcome of the general election. (A full analysis of the 1991 local election results within parliamentary constituencies will be available from the authors in late November.) Labour did suffer some embarrassing reverses, particularly in the more rural districts of County Durham, but in four out of five authorities their vote rose rather than fell compared with 1987. They topped the poll in such unlikely places as Blackpool, and ran the Conservatives very close in Cherwell, Hertsmere and Daventry.

TABLE F: Party share in English and Welsh Districts with elections by 'thirds', 1986-1991

	1986	1987	1988	1990	1991
Conservative	34.6	40.2	40.2	30.2	35.4
Labour	33.5	29.5	36.1	43.8	35.8
Alliance/LD	28.4	27.6	18.5	18.5	23.3

The parliamentary implications of local results will also be occupying the minds of Liberal Democrats. Of their recent byelection gains, they comfortably retained control of Eastbourne council and took almost 50% of the vote, but were some way behind the Conservatives in second place in Ribble Valley. In general, though, they had most reason to be satisfied with the outcome of the 1991 local elections. They polled twice as well as the opinion polls had been suggesting; made 500 gains compared with 1987 despite having a smaller share of the vote; and won an overall majority on 17 new councils. Their best performance was in Wear Valley where there was an 18% swing to them from Labour. Elsewhere Liberal Democrat success was more closely correlated with a falling off of support for the Conservatives, as, for example, in Oadby and Wigston, Wychavon, Taunton Deane and Stratford-on-Avon. Where, however, the Alliance standard bearers had tended to be the SDP or the Liberal Democrats were unable or unwilling to field as many candidates as in 1987, there were some quite dramatic falls in their support.

The Greens fielded more candidates than at any previous election. Although their star seems rather to have waned since the heady days of the 1989 European Assembly elections, and although they won only a handful of seats, they did do well enough in twenty authorities to have been able to claim representation on the council if a proportional system of election with a 5% threshold had been in operation! They tended to do best, as usual, in middle-class, university towns like Oxford, Warwick, Brighton and York, but their most impressive performance was in Dover, reflecting perhaps local concern about the environmental and employment impact of the channel tunnel.

In Wales, local politics at the district level continues to be dominated by Labour in the urban and mining areas and by Independents in the countryside. Labour was the only political party to contest more than a quarter of the wards, and although their share of the votes cast does not look too impressive, they won a large number of seats unopposed. Plaid Cymru fielded more candidates and had more candidates returned than the Conservatives, although they remained behind them in the popular vote. The most significant changes occurred in South Glamorgan, where Labour took control of Cardiff and the Tories lost Vale of Glamorgan with Labour emerging as the largest party in a now hung authority.

There were fewer women candidates in Wales than in England, 21.8% of the total compared with 28.9%, and fewer women elected -18% as against 26.2%. The shire districts in England have been the most promising electoral arena for the recruitment and success of women, but the Labour party at the local level has always fielded comparatively few women and it is probably their dominance in Wales which accounts for the disparity between the two nations.

USING THE HANDBOOK

Local authorities are listed in alphabetical order within three separate categories -Metropolitan Boroughs; English Districts; and Welsh Districts. An index is provided at the rear of the Handbook to show the shire or former metropolitan county within which each district is located, together with a record of the political composition of each council having elections in May 1991. All election results are taken from figures provided by and checked with local Electoral Administrators. In some cases these differ from Press Association data, especially, for example, where candidates who specifically stood as 'Liberal' or as 'Independent' have been added by PA to the Liberal Democrat or Conservative totals for the authority.

At the beginning of each section there is some summary information about the elections in each council. Percentage share is the proportion of the total valid vote polled by each party. The number of seats contested and the number of seats won by each party is also noted. In authorities which hold annual elections this latter figure will not, of course, correspond with the council composition data. Turnout (the figure in brackets) is the average turnout in those wards which had a contested election.

The results for each ward are listed in alphabetical order within districts. The figure in brackets is the electorate for 1991. The practice adopted by local authorities for calculating this figure varies -in some cases it includes all names on the 1991 register, in others it is a more accurate record of only those entitled to vote on election day in May. It has been impossible to adopt a standard definition of electorate or reliably to identify the particular procedures used by each authority.

A @ next to a ward name indicates that more than one seat was contested at the 1991 election. The figure following specifies the number of vacancies. The appearance of a date in [square brackets] on this line indicates that the election was not held for some reason on May 2nd but was contested on the later, specified date.

Candidates are listed in descending order of vote. The first initial is given; 'Ms' after a candidate's name indicates a woman; and '*' indicates that the candidate was a sitting councillor. It proved impossible to obtain all this information for some districts. Where no women candidates or incumbent councillors at all are listed for an entire local authority, it may be assumed that the data are missing. The candidates whose names are in bold are those elected.

The abbreviations used for party are relatively straightforward:

CON: Conservative
LAB: Labour
LD: Liberal Democrat
SDP: Social Democrat
IND: Independent

N.B. Some individual candidates who did not specify a party affiliation have been coded as IND.

Vote is the number of electors who supported each candidate and Share the proportion of the total number who cast a valid ballot supporting each candidate. Where a candidate was returned unopposed this is noted under 'vote' as either Unopp or 0.0. Turnout is the proportion of the electorate given for the ward who cast valid ballots. The figure to the right of the turnout represents the lead of the winning candidate over the second placed candidate in percentage terms rounded to one decimal place. Where available, the party topping the poll in the same ward in 1987 is listed.

In the case of wards with multiple vacancies a number of different procedures have been adopted regarding the calculation of turnout and share of the vote. Where accurate figures were not available on the number of ballot papers issued, we have had to prepare an estimate of turnout. In calculating share of the vote and turnout we have taken our method from that used by Curtice et al in Electoral Studies 2.1 1983. We define averages as follows:

Where each of the three major parties fields as many candidates as there are vacancies, we simply average the votes cast for each party's candidates.

Where one or more of the major parties fields less than a full slate, we note the size of the smallest slate ('n') and average each party's 'n' best votes.

'Independent' and 'Other' candidates are always counted individually in terms of share of the vote. However, where there are a large number of non-party candidates and no official information on turnout is available, we have assumed the number of electors to be the total number of votes cast divided by the number of vacancies. The accuracy of our calculated data in some rural wards may have been affected by these necessary transformations.
