Introduction

Only twice in history have the general and local elections been held simultaneously. The first occasion in 1979 saw the Conservatives sweep to power. The second occasion, eighteen years later on May 1 1997, resulted in the same party being deposed. Inevitably, the local elections took a back seat as the parties' campaign resources were concentrated on the general election. It is ironic, therefore, that these 'forgotten' elections should witness much higher levels of turnout than normal. Fewer than four in ten electors participated in the previous county elections in 1993. For the next four years at least county councillors elected in 1997 will be able to claim a mandate from a majority of electors.

It is a very different local government map before us in 1997. The process of structural change has meant administrative counties have disappeared from view. Gone are the 8 Welsh counties, replaced by 22 new unitary authorities. In England the abolished counties of Avon, Cleveland, Humberside and Isle of Wight have now been joined in administrative oblivion by Berkshire. The former county of Hereford and Worcester has been dissolved and in its place we find a new unitary authority of Herefordshire and a two tier administrative county of Worcestershire. Other counties have not undergone such draconian changes but the scale of reorganisation should not be underestimated. The creation of unitary authorities based on the larger cities outside of London and the metropolitan boroughs has meant that many counties have been transformed. Devon, for example, has lost Plymouth and Torbay; Dorset will no longer administer Bournemouth and Poole; Hampshire's boundaries will be minus Portsmouth and Southampton. This quiet revolution, largely unnoticed outside local government, meant that of the 47 English and Welsh counties elected in 1993 in only 14 cases did the authority survive intact.

Overall, therefore, 1997 saw elections for 34 shire counties, 19 new unitary authorities, partial elections for two further unitary authorities (Bristol and Hull) and, unusually, elections for a single district authority (Malvern Hills) which had undergone an extensive boundary review.

Such changes made it extremely difficult to estimate precisely how many seats and councils each party was defending going into the elections. Curiously, it was felt that while the Conservatives might lose the general election the party might salvage some comfort from the local elections. This argument centred on the Conservative disasters of 1993 and 1995 when the party lost many council seats, polling a national equivalent vote in these years of 31% and 25% respectively. The reason for using two different years as the basis for comparison was simply that the county contests would be based on what happened in 1993 while for the new unitary authorities the relevant year was 1995. It followed that should Conservative candidates poll better than in either of these years then the party would increase its number of seats and the number of councils it controlled. The cloud hanging over the party's general election prospects was lightened by the potential for gains at the local elections.

In the event the Conservatives made only a modest recovery. As Table 1 shows the party's 2,051 candidates won 36.9% of the vote in the county contests bringing a reward of 873 seats. The picture was even bleaker in the unitary authorities. Here, the Conservatives won 31.3% of the vote but only 233 seats - 22% of the total. In the aftermath of its general election defeat the Conservative party has set great store in fighting and winning future local government elections. Success in local government will be a necessary foundation for the party's national recovery but the decline in local government has been long and steep and it will prove extremely difficult to repair the damage between now and the next general election. That is partly because both Labour and the Liberal Democrats have become more selective about which seats to target and, in the case of the Liberal Democrats, more effective in defending territory already won. Although Liberal Democrat resources were stretched the party still succeeded in capturing almost 500 county council seats with just 26.8% of the overall vote. In the unitary authorities the party polled almost eight points lower than the Conservatives but its share in seats, 21.9%, was virtually identical. By concentrating its vote in particular areas the Liberal Democrats have succeeded in overcoming some of the worst effects of our electoral system. The days when Alliance candidates accumulated votes with little return in seats have disappeared.

Across the counties, the Conservatives made a net gain of only 124 seats, although this was enough for a number of county councils, including Cambridgeshire, Kent, Surrey and West Sussex to be returned to Conservative control. Elsewhere, including East Sussex, Hertfordshire and North Yorkshire, the Conservatives are the largest party in hung councils and by-election gains may be sufficient to win majority control during the next four years. In the new unitary authorities, where the disastrous elections of 1995 were the base for comparison in most cases, the number of Conservative councillors increased by approximately 100. Only in Bracknell Forest and Wokingham were the gains sufficient to give the Conservatives an overall council majority - the first time the party has succeeded in winning control in elections for the new unitary authorities. Labour lost overall control in two unitary authorities, Bracknell Forest and Peterborough, but was compensated by taking outright control in Cumbria. The Liberal Democrats lost just over 200 seats overall and saw their majority evaporate on four county councils and two unitary councils. Although these losses included Cornwall, where the party nevertheless captured four of that county's five parliamentary constituencies, other losses were largely notional. In both East Sussex and Hampshire, for example, the Liberal Democrats were deemed to have control only by virtue of being the majority party after structural changes affecting those counties had been taken into account. Some measure of the party's entrenchment in the westcountry can be gauged from the fact that Liberal Democrats retained control in Somerset, remain the largest party in Dorset, Gloucestershire and Wiltshire and will take overall control of Devon once the county councillors from Plymouth and Torbay cease to hold office in April 1998.

Table 4 shows a relatively small number of seats were uncontested - just 1.5% of all county vacancies were filled without a contest and only 0.4% of seats in the unitary authorities. More than 80% of county seats featured candidates from all three main parties while in the unitary authorities 71% of wards were similarly contested. Women candidates continue to contest approximately a quarter of all county vacancies but in the unitary authorities that figure rises to three in every ten. The percentage of women councillors is in line with other recent local elections and remains higher than that for the House of Commons which, following the 1997 general election, currently stands at 18%.

USING THE HANDBOOK

The structure of local government has, once again, undergone substantial changes. In a large number of cases the creation of new unitary authorities has meant that the administrative counties are no longer the same as they were four years ago. The counties of Avon, Berkshire, Cleveland, Humberside and Isle of Wight no longer exist while Hereford and Worcester has been divided in two - one half becoming the new county of Worcestershire, the other a unitary authority confusingly called Herefordshire. The eight counties in Wales have all been abolished. This meant that there were elections in 1997 for a total of 34 county councils, compared with 47 in 1993. There were also elections for 21 unitary authorities as well as a district council, Malvern Hills, which underwent considerable boundary revisions. Reflecting those changes this year's Handbook is organised into three sections dealing respectively with elections for the county councils, unitary authorities and the solitary district council. Election results have generally been taken from figures provided by and checked with local Electoral Administrators.

Before the ward by ward results we have provided a section of aggregate data covering the different types of local authority. The ward results for each authority have been aggregated to produce a set of summary statistics. These include the percentage vote share for a range of parties. Where wards elect more than one councillor then the vote of the best placed candidate for each party is used in calculating total vote. In the cases of Independent candidates these were grouped according to the number of seats in a ward. In the case of a three-member ward with six Independent candidates, therefore, the votes of the first and fourth placed Independent would contribute towards the total vote figure. The number of seats contested and the number of seats won by each party is also noted. Turnout, in brackets after the name of the authority, is the average turnout in those wards which had a contested election. In those authorities where a direct comparison with the 1993 elections has been possible we have also provided the percentage change for the different parties. This figure does not control for varying patterns of party contestation, however, and interested readers should consult directly the 1993 Local Elections Handbook for such information. In the case of the county results we have also aggregated the results and provided summary statistics for the constituent district authorities.

The results for each ward are listed in alphabetical order within their authorities. The figure in brackets is the electorate for 1997. The practice adopted by local authorities for calculating this figure varies - in some cases it includes all names on the 1997 register, in others it is a more accurate record of only those entitled to vote on election day in May. It has been impossible to adopt a standard definition of electorate or reliably to identify the particular procedures used by each authority.

Candidates are listed in descending order of vote. The first initial is given; 'Ms' after a candidate's name indicates a woman; and '*' indicates that the candidate was a sitting councillor. In the cases of the new unitary authorities a * indicates a sitting councillor on the associated district authority. Candidates whose names appear in bold are those elected. Vote is the number of electors who supported each candidate and Share the proportion of the total number who cast a valid ballot supporting each candidate. In the case of multi-member wards employed in elections for the unitary and district councils we have used the vote of each party's best placed candidate in order to calculate total vote. Where a candidate(s) was returned unopposed this is noted and turnout recorded as '0.0'. Below the list of candidates, votes and shares is a line of data detailing first, the result at the corresponding election in 1993, then the turnout and the percentage majority in 1997. In the case of elections to the unitary and district councils the result field for the previous contest will be missing because no equivalent election was held. Turnout is the proportion of the electorate given for the ward who cast valid ballots. In the overwhelming majority of cases turnout is that given by the local election office and has thus been calculated knowing the number of valid ballot papers issued. In the remaining cases we have ourselves calculated turnout from the available information. The figure to the right of the turnout represents the lead of the winning party over the second placed party in percentage terms rounded to one decimal place.

Candidates who stand for local election use an extensive variety of party labels and we have felt obliged to reduce these to manageable numbers. Unless the party label included the word 'Independent' we have treated such candidates as if they were official party candidates. It was necessary to bring together a large number of candidates under the general heading of 'Independents' The descriptions used for party in this year's Handbook are as follows:
