Introduction

In 2001, just as they had in 1997, local and parliamentary elections coincided. With no elections held in the London and metropolitan boroughs, nor indeed in Scotland and Wales not all electors had the opportunity to vote in the synchronous elections – local elections were held only in 34 English shire counties and 11 unitary councils. However, the councils voting on June 7 2001 were not precisely those that had had contests in May 1997 (see Local Elections Handbook 1997). Specific media coverage of the local elections was minimal although that for the general election itself reflected the general feeling that another Labour victory was a foregone conclusion. Certainly the turnout of less than 60%, relatively high for a local election but abysmal for a general election, suggests that a significant section of the electorate felt disengaged from the political process.

Table 1 summarises the distribution of votes and seats. Across the shires, where the number of contests is comparable with four years before (2,215 compared with 2,203), one and a half million fewer electors voted in 2001 than did so in 1997. The Conservative party retained its position as the leading party in these authorities. There was a three-point rise in its vote share but a six-point increase in seat share. Labour's vote, 30.4%, was marginally down while the decline in support for Liberal Democrat candidates was similar – a fall of about two percentage points. The mean share for Conservative candidates was 38.9%, Labour 32.2% and Liberal Democrats 28.8%. Across a total of 1,740 contests featuring candidates from all three main parties the average vote shares were Conservative 38.7%, Labour 31.2% and Liberal Democrats 27.2%. Closer examination of the ratio between each parties' share of seats and votes shows that both Conservative and Labour benefited from the operation of the electoral system but a seat/vote ratio of below one (0.7) proves that the Liberal Democrats were under-rewarded in terms of seats. Despite the lack of public interest more candidates than before contested county seats (6,969 compared with 6,814 in 1997), reflected in the slightly higher ratio of candidates to seats in 2001 (3.16) compared with 1997 (3.09).

Voting in the 11 unitary authorities with elections reflects Labour's strength in these more urban authorities. Comparisons between 1997 and 2001 are difficult because of the different number of councils and seats (21 unitary councils had elections in 1997; 269 seats in 2001 compared with 1,044 in 1997). Labour finished ahead overall, with the Conservatives in second place able to keep the Liberal Democrats at bay. Although the gap between Labour and Conservative was not great in terms of vote the former received a much larger share of the seats. In fact, the combined Conservative and Liberal Democrat share in seats could only match Labour's. The mean share for candidates was Conservative 32.4%, Labour 41.5% and Liberal Democrats 28.6%. An average of 3.09 candidates contested each vacancy. In 164 contests featuring candidates from all three main parties the average vote shares were Conservative 30.7%, Labour 38.7% and Liberal Democrats 26.6%. While the results in the shires and unitary authorities reflect the relative strength of Conservative and Labour parties the performance of the Liberal Democrats is the most even across the two types of local authority.

Despite the disappointments of the general election the Conservatives did gain political control of six new shire county councils (see Table 2). Even so, the party failed to break through in the more urban unitary authorities. Cheshire, often a ‘hung’ or ‘balanced’ county, fell to the party, which now has majority control for the first time since the early 1980s. Labour’s chances of thwarting the Conservatives in North Yorkshire and Leicestershire were always slender. Following these elections the Conservatives have secured majorities on both councils. Other results reflect the modest improvement in the Conservatives’ general election performance in some counties. Essex, which had been in and out of Conservative control since 1997, was regained, and in Norfolk, where the Conservative share of the vote increased by almost 5%, the party surpassed its target of 7 gains to secure an overall majority. Majority control in Dorset was regained but this will be regarded as insufficient compensation for losing the parliamentary constituencies of Dorset South to Labour and Dorset Mid and Poole North to the Liberal Democrats. Despite increasing both its national parliamentary vote and number of MPs, the Liberal Democrats lost ground locally. Both Devon and Somerset county councils, a significant part of the party’s westcountry heartland, are now under no overall control. In Cumbria, Labour’s dismal showing across the foot-and-mouth-hit county leaves it now three seats short of an overall majority.

At one point during the election campaign Conservative Central Office floated the rather fanciful notion that it might gain an additional 500 council seats. Actually, the party made a net gain of just 109 seats (see Table 3). Labour lost a little ground in the shire counties but compensated for this in the battle for the unitary councils. The Liberal Democrats were largely undone by the stronger Conservative showing in the county elections but a net loss of just 93 seats, when much of its energy was concentrated on the parliamentary election, will not displease the party. Although the pace of Conservative recovery is undeniably better at local than national level it has remained painfully slow over recent years. However, it is feasible that at some point during Labour’s second term the Conservatives could become the largest party in local government. How far that local superiority translates into the battle for parliamentary seats will be one of the more intriguing features of the next general election in 2005/6.

Boundary changes taken into account*

Compared with a normal set of local elections average turnout (62.5% in the shires, 57.6% for the unitary authorities) is high but it might have been far higher given the context. There was some variation according to the party winning the seat. In seats captured by Conservatives the mean turnout was 65% in the shires and 64.3% in the unitary authorities. For Labour the relative figures were just 58.0% and 53.6% while those for the Liberal Democrats were 63.8% and 62.3% for the shires and unitary councils respectively. This pattern of differences in turnout resembles that seen at the general election. There was an enormous range in ward level turnout with the maximum of 82.7% recorded in the Great Ayton division of Hambleton, North Yorkshire through to the lowest turnout of just 10.6% who turned out to vote in the Tilbury St. Chads ward, Thurrock.

Almost 8,000 candidates contested and just below 80% of these stood for one of the three main parties. The number of unopposed seats was extremely low – a record for a single set of elections. The proportion of women candidates and councillors remains stable across the different types of local authority, with approximately one in four candidates for local political office being female and a slightly smaller percentage successful in winning. As before, the number of women elected to the English shire counties, 23.2% in 2001, is smaller than is found in other types of local authority. A significant majority of sitting councillors that chose to fight on was re-elected. However, it should also be borne in mind when considering the issue of councillor turnover that no less than 28.7% of wards/divisions had no incumbent seeking re-election. Voluntary withdrawal by sitting councillors remains a more powerful explanation for changes on the council benches than defeat at the ballot box.

Of course, one fascinating aspect of these simultaneous national and local elections was the opportunity they gave to voters to engage in ‘split-ticket voting’, that is supporting candidates from different parties according to the type of election. Earlier research has shown that in 1997 up to one in five voters cast a ballot for different parties on the same visit to the polling booth. In 1997 both the Conservatives and Labour did, on average, less well at the local election compared with the parliamentary contest. By contrast, Liberal Democrat support was some five percentage points higher at local than parliamentary level. Split-ticket voting was certainly in evidence at the 2001 elections although early indications suggest that it was slightly less than four years before.

As in 1997, there were some sharp contrasts between local and general election voting in some constituencies. The pattern of voting in the marginal seat of North Norfolk, which the Conservatives lost to the Liberal Democrats, is instructive. Compared with its general election vote Labour's local vote is nine percentage points higher, while that of the Liberal Democrats' is ten points lower. Given similar levels of turnout at the two contests this strongly suggests that many Labour local voters made a tactical switch to the Liberal Democrat candidate in the battle for the parliamentary seat. Similarly, it appears that the Liberal Democrats' successful defence of Winchester was aided by fully half the local Labour vote defecting to the Liberal Democrats in the general election ballot.

Using the Handbook

In 2001 there were elections for a total of 45 local authorities comprising 34 English shire county councils and 11 unitary councils. There were no local elections for the London and metropolitan boroughs, the shire districts, or in Scotland and Wales. The Handbook is organised into sections, which cover the county results followed by those for the unitary councils. Counties are organised alphabetically and results are reported in alphabetical order of constituent district areas. Election results have generally been taken from figures provided by, and checked with, Electoral Administrators.

Before the ward by ward results we have a section containing aggregate data covering each local authority. Ward results for each authority were aggregated to produce this set of summary statistics. These include the percentage vote share for a range of parties and independent candidates. Where wards elect more than one councillor then the vote of the best placed candidate for each party is used in calculating total vote. In the cases of Independent candidates these were grouped according to the number of seats in a ward. In the case of a three-member ward with six Independent candidates, therefore, the votes of the first and fourth placed Independent would contribute towards the total vote figure. The number of seats contested and the number of seats won by each party is also noted.

Turnout, in brackets after the name of the authority, is the average turnout in those wards which had a contested election. Table 3 at the rear of the book contains details of local authority turnout that has been calculated using a different method. Instead of taking the average value in contested seats we have summed the votes and electorates in contested wards and then expressed one as a percentage of the other. These two methods for calculating local authority level turnout will produce slightly different figures for those authorities that have a large range for ward level electorates.

In those authorities where a direct comparison with the 1997 elections has been possible we have also provided the percentage change for the different parties. In a large number of cases this has not proved practical. Many of the unitary councils have a different base year and we felt that comparisons might prove misleading. Furthermore, a large number of authorities have seen boundary changes recently implemented and direct comparison with 1997 was not possible. In those cases where comparisons have been made between a party's vote in 2000 and 1997 we have not controlled for varying patterns of party competition. Interested readers should consult the relevant year's Handbook for such information.

The final two lines of the summary of aggregate statistics provide information relating to the number of candidates fielded by each party as well as the number of candidates that were successfully elected. Note, that since the unitary councils are electing only a fraction of the council body that the 'seats won' category is not equivalent to the full council composition.

In the main body of the book the results for each ward are listed in alphabetical order within each local authority. The figure in brackets is the electorate for 2001. The practice adopted by local authorities for calculating this figure varies - in some cases it includes all names on the electoral register as originally published, in others it is a more accurate record of only those entitled to vote on election day in May. It has been impossible to adopt a standard definition of electorate or reliably to identify the particular procedures used by each authority. The appearance of a date in [square brackets] on this line indicates that the election was not held for some reason on June 7 but was contested on the later, specified date. This year there was only one such instance where the election was postponed and held at a later date, viz., St. Albans North.

Candidates are listed in descending order of vote within each ward. The first initial is given; 'Ms.' after a candidate's name indicates a woman; and '*' indicates that the candidate was a sitting councillor, although not necessarily for the ward fought in 1997. Vote is the number of electors who supported each candidate and Share the proportion of the total number who cast a valid ballot supporting each candidate. The process of rounding means that shares do not necessarily sum to 100.

In the case of multi-member wards where more than one vacancy was filled we have used the vote of each party's best placed candidate in order to calculate total vote and hence party shares. Where a candidate(s) was returned unopposed details for vote, share and turnout are denoted by a dash.

Below the list of candidates is a further line of data. First, we print the name of the party whose candidate finished top of the poll at the corresponding election in 1997 (or later in some unitary authorities). In some local authorities recent ward boundary changes have meant that it has not always been possible to indicate a winning party at the previous election. In multi-member wards it is important not to assume that the named party won all available seats in that ward; so-called 'split-wards' where seats are shared between parties are fairly common. Next, is recorded the percentage turnout. Turnout is the proportion of the electorate that cast valid ballots at the election. In the overwhelming majority of cases turnout is that given by the local Electoral Administrator and has thus been calculated knowing the number of valid ballot papers issued. In the remaining cases we have ourselves calculated turnout from the available information. The figure to the right of the turnout represents the lead of the winning party over the second placed party in percentage terms rounded to one decimal place. The process of rounding means that in some cases the percentage majority may not be exactly the same as the winning party's vote share minus the second-placed party's share.

Candidates standing for local election use an extensive variety of party labels and we have felt obliged to reduce these to manageable numbers. Unless the party label included the word 'Independent' we have treated such candidates as if they were official party candidates. It was necessary to bring together a large number of candidates under the general heading of 'Independents'. In some cases we have retained the labels used by specific local parties when the number of candidates fielded has warranted it. A list of party labels follows:
