ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

We wish to thank the Social Science Research Council for permission to print these election results. These have been collected by us as part of a larger SSRC-financed project on local government elections in Scotland, England and Wales and in the form in which they are presented are SSRC copyright. We also wish to thank the Returning Officers and their staffs for their essential help in checking the results for their Districts.

Brian McHardy, Wilma McHardy, Judith Bell and Hugh Bochel allowed themselves to be persuaded that local government election results were interesting and even exciting, and we are very grateful to them for bearing the burden of data preparation and processing, and for doing much of the work on the final production of this publication.

Iain Wright of the Department of Geography, University of Dundee, devised the computer programme for the tabulation of the results and the analysis with much enthusiasm and expertise; he also prepared the map showing District boundaries and gave valuable advice in numerous directions.

The Department of Geography in the University of Dundee, and in particular Mr. W. G. Berry, were helpful in a number of indispensable ways, not least in allowing us to monopolise their computer terminals for very lengthy periods. The staff of the Computing Centre of the University were as usual forebearing and generous with their skills and time.

The Research Fund of the Faculty of Arts and Social Sciences, University of Dundee, contributed towards the cost of analysis.

As ever, we have to thank Doris Tindal, secretary of the Department of Political Science, University of Dundee, for help far beyond what should be demanded. Her tolerance, accuracy and general efficiency result in a publication which might not otherwise have seen the light of day.

All responsibility for the interpretation and accuracy of the results is ours.

INTRODUCTION

The second round of District Council elections in Scotland took place in May 1977. The first elections under the reorganized local government structure had been held in 1974 and councillors elected then served for a period of three years. Those returned in 1977 will hold office for four years which will be the normal term from now on.

This collection and analysis of the 1977 election results is the second to be undertaken by the authors. Our reasons for producing this volume remain the same as those which motivated us to publish our first collection, and the reception accorded to that volume has confirmed our view that there is a place for an easily accessible, comprehensive record of local election results. Moreover, it is our impression that local elections have attracted increasing interest on the part of the media, political parties and political scientists.

For the media and the politicians local elections are important in two main ways. Firstly, they do determine who is to control the local authorities and, since the latter administer a variety of important services, employ large numbers of people and raise and spend a great deal of money, this is clearly important, especially if it is thought that a controlling party can significantly affect the policy of a local authority. Secondly, and perhaps more importantly for national politicians, local election results are now widely employed as indicators of the current popularity of the national parties amongst the electorate. It is evident that voting in local elections is not, on the whole, a product of reactions to purely local issues and candidates. Rather it reflects the electorate's feelings about the national government, national issues, events and personalities. For that reason, local election results can be regarded, with necessary caution, as mid-term tests of the state of opinion on the performance of governments. They have an advantage over opinion polls in that they involve more people and actual votes rather than hypothetical vote intention. Moreover, they reflect variations in opinion in different parts of the country. In the absence of parliamentary by-elections, and in view of the fluidity of the political situation, it has been difficult to assess the mood of the Scottish electorate. Other reliable indicators of the levels of party support have been eagerly sought. In the past few years even local by-elections in Scotland have been reported in, and commented upon, by the national media, and their results awaited with anxiety by Westminster politicians in an unprecedented way.

Local election results have also attracted the attention of political scientists. For those interested in parties, electoral systems and voting behaviour local elections provide a massive, and as yet largely untapped, accumulation of data. The regularity with which local elections are held, the large number, small size and diversity of the electoral units, and the variety of patterns of party competition all help to make local election results a potentially rich source of data for developing and testing hypotheses relating to parties and voting behaviour.

The data recorded in this book should be definitive. A preliminary listing of results was made from local and national newspapers. These were checked with Returning Officers, and a final version prepared. The results were processed by computer and in order to speed publication and to minimize expense we have used copies of the computer print-out as the basis for printing. We hope that the more expeditious availability of the data and the lower cost to purchasers compensate for a slightly lower typographical quality.

Following this introduction there are three sections to the book. Firstly, we provide a commentary on, and analysis of, some aspects of the results. Secondly, there is a series of summary tables, and finally the ward results are presented. The ordering of regions and districts which we have adopted is that used by the Scottish Office and seems to be largely geographically based.

The results for individual wards contain the following information - Ward number and (where appropriate) ward name, * electorate, percentage turnout, the number of rejected ballots and these as a percentage of the total ballots cast, and the names of the candidates, their party or description, votes received and share of votes. Women are identified by the prefix 'Ms'. In addition the following symbols are used:

- = Retiring councillor elected at first elections in 1974 (not necessarily for the same ward)
- * Retiring councillor elected at by-election
- + Retiring councillor who has changed parties since 1974 elections.

Where a gain is indicated this is in relation to the 1974 result and disregards by-election changes.

The abbreviations used to identify the party affiliations of candidates are as follows:

COMM	- Communist	LIB	- Liberal
CON	- Conservative	MOD	- Moderate
CON/RP	- Conservative Ratepayer	MOD/RP	- Monifieth Ratepayer
CS	- Christian Socialist	PROG	- Progressive
DEMLAB	- Democratic Labour	PROGCON	- Progressive/Conservative
EAFDA	- Electors' Association for a Fair Deal for Airdrie	RA	- Ratepayers' Association
IND	- Independent	REALAB	- Real Labour
INDCON	- Independent Conservative	RESASS	- Residents' Association
INDLAB	- Independent Labour	SCOTNAT	- Scottish Nationalist
INDMOD	- Independent Moderate	SCOTSOC	- Scottish Socialist
IND/RP	- Independent Ratepayer	SLP	- Scottish Labour Party
INDSN	- Independent Scottish Nationalist	SLPD	- Scottish Labour Party Dundee
LAB	- Labour	SNP	- Scottish National Party
		SOC	- Socialist

The ward results are directly comparable with those given in our collection of 1974 results. In a few cases there have been revisions of ward or district boundaries. Most of these are minor changes, however, and only two need to be noted here. The first involved an adjustment of the boundary between Caithness and Sutherland and the effect of this was a reduction in the number of wards in Caithness from 16 to 15 and an increase in the number of wards in Sutherland from 12 to 14. The second involved the creation of an extra ward in Monklands district (ward 21). This area was transferred from Motherwell and in that district ward 28 was abolished and wards 29 and 30 renumbered 28 and 29.

* The numbering of wards is mandatory, but naming wards is discretionary. In some cases the names we have used are not official, but they describe roughly the location or composition of the wards.

It should be noted too that three districts have had their names changed since 1974, Argyll has been renamed Argyll and Bute, Bishopbriggs and Kirkintilloch is now Strathkelvin and Merrick is now Wigtown.

TRENDS IN DISTRICT ELECTIONS

In this volume we present a series of tables which summarise a number of aspects of the 1977 District elections in Scotland. Generally these allow direct comparisons with the tables in our previous volume dealing with the 1974 elections,<sup>1</sup> though the data presented here are more extensive. The comprehensive nature of the material contained in both volumes enables readers to construct other tables suitable for their own purposes and to interpret the data for themselves, but a preliminary discussion of some of the more significant trends is offered in this section.

We begin by focussing on three main areas - contests and candidatures, turnout, and the performances of the parties - considering each of these at Scottish, regional and district levels.

1. CONTESTS AND CANDIDATURES

(i) Contests

One of the functions of elections in democratic systems is the provision of a means whereby citizens can participate in the political process by voting or by standing for elected positions. Local elections have not, however, been noted for high levels of participation on the part of the electorate. Moreover competition for elected positions has frequently been low and in many cases absent, with the result that electors' opportunities to participate by voting have been restricted. Uncontested returns have been quite common in local elections whereas they are almost unknown in modern parliamentary elections in this country. In 1972 in the Scottish burgh elections for instance, 38% of seats were uncontested, and in 1970, when rural areas also had elections, 49% of the seats at stake went to candidates who were unopposed.

Since the reorganization of the Scottish local government system things have improved somewhat. In 1974 there was a significant increase in the proportion of contested elections - 79.5% of district wards, containing 86.8% of the Scottish electorate, were contested. This level was maintained in 1977. Tables 1 and 2 show that in the second round of elections 77.9% of wards were contested and only 13.4% of the electorate did not have a chance to vote because of the absence of competing candidates in their wards.

Aggregating the figures for districts to regional level, we find that, as in 1974, the peripheral regions, Highland, Borders and Dumfries and Galloway had the lowest level of contests. In these three regions taken together, only 46.4% of wards were contested while in the remainder of Scotland the figure was 86.4%. Although we do not present the figures for individual districts, our data show that variations in the proportion of wards contested are very large; at one extreme all wards were contested in twelve districts (9 of these being in Strathclyde), while in five districts (3 of them in the Highland Region) two-thirds or more of the wards did not have a contest.

(ii) Candidatures

The pattern of uncontested returns is very strongly related to the pattern of party competition in districts. Reference to Tables 3 and 4 reveals that in the regions where uncontested returns were most numerous, the major parties were not conspicuous in the elections, which tended to be dominated by Independent candidates.

Parties, unlike Independent candidates, have an incentive to contest seats that seem to be hopeless for them. By forcing an election they can keep their flag flying in weak areas, test their levels of support for Parliamentary purposes and also tie down their opponents' resources to some extent. There will, of course, be cases in which parties are unable to find suitable candidates, feel that even a token fight is not worth the effort, have no organisation on the ground, or consciously decide to concentrate their resources in more promising wards. For these sorts of reasons there will continue to be some unopposed returns.

The number of candidates put forward by each party in 1974 and 1977 is given in Table A.

TABLE A
Number of Candidates by Party

	1974	1977
Con	539	543
Lab	753	719
Lib	148	136
SNP	269	465
Comm	128	90
Ind	644	521
Others	79	97
	2,559	2,571

Three features of these figures merit comment. First there is the increase in the number of Conservative candidates. The increase is small, but the fact that it has taken place is significant. The Conservative Party in Scotland for long played no overt part in local politics, being content to leave the task of opposing the Labour Party at local level to groups of 'Moderates', 'Progressives', 'Ratepayers', Independents and so on. Clearly, however, the Conservatives are beginning to take a more serious view of local elections and are gradually entering the local political arena as a party in some new areas. As in 1974, however, the Conservatives were virtually absent from the elections in the Highland and Dumfries and Galloway Regions, and it remains to be seen whether they will extend their electoral commitment into those areas still dominated by Independents.

The decline in the number of Independent candidates is also significant. This is partly due to some former Independents now aligning themselves with the Conservatives and, very occasionally, with other parties. It may also be that Independent councillors in the old burgh, county and district councils tried to win seats against party opposition in 1974, failed, and have not stood again. In 1974 Independents constituted 25.2% of all candidates, but in 1977 this dropped to 20.3%. Regional variations in Independent candidates are again very large, as can be seen from Tables 3 and 4, with Highland, Grampian, Borders and Dumfries and Galloway having large numbers and the rest of Scotland relatively few.

The most striking feature of Table A is, however, the marked increase in the number of SNP candidates. In 1974 the SNP contested fewer than one-quarter of the wards whereas in 1977 they contested more than 40%. The SNP made a major effort to secure control of a number of districts and during the election campaign there was much discussion in the media of their attack on Labour's 'industrial heartland' in the West of Scotland. Like the other major parties the SNP no doubt regards control of district councils as desirable in itself, but for them local elections are also seen as a useful springboard towards their main aim - the winning of Scottish seats in a General Election. In terms of numbers, the increase in SNP candidates was most noticeable in Lothian (up by 35) and Strathclyde (an increase of 117). Within these Regions particularly large increases in the number of SNP candidates were noticeable in Edinburgh (25), Glasgow (20), Renfrew (17) and Cunningham (17). Somewhat surprisingly the SNP failed to make any substantial challenge in Aberdeen where they had only 4 candidates, and in Dundee, where they hold one of the parliamentary seats, they had no candidates in the local elections.

(iii) Uncontested Wards

We noted above that there were relatively large numbers of unopposed elections in regions where party competition is weak, and we also suggested that even where the parties are electorally active there will, for a variety of reasons, continue to be uncontested seats. The pattern of uncontested wins for various parties must be borne in mind, for otherwise figures showing votes or shares of votes obtained by the parties may be misleading. For example in Nairn District the SNP obtained over half of the votes, but only 2 of the 10 council seats, six Independents and one SNP candidate being returned without opposition. The number of seats obtained unopposed by each of the parties is shown in Table 5. As in 1974, Independents were the most likely by far to be returned unopposed, though not inconsiderable numbers of Conservative and Labour candidates did not have to face an opponent. Given what we said earlier about the incentives that parties have to contest as many seats as practicable, the pattern of uncontested seats requires some explanation. Clearly the concentration of unopposed Independent returns in Highland, parts of Grampian, Borders and Dumfries and Galloway is a reflection of weak or non-existent party competition at local government level. On the other hand, the weakness of Conservative Party organization and support in parts of Kirkcaldy, East Lothian, Monklands and Cumnock and Doon Valley probably accounts for the concentration of unopposed Labour returns in these districts (19 in 1977), while Labour weaknesses may help explain the uncontested Conservative and Independent successes in the otherwise fairly competitive districts of Gordon, Angus, Perth and Kinross, North East Fife, Berwickshire, Eastwood and parts of Kyle and Carrick (44 in 1977). A conscious policy of non-participation on the part of other parties is suggested by the incidence of unopposed Labour wins in Aberdeen (9 in 1974, 5 in 1977).

The discrimination shown by parties about which wards to leave uncontested seems on the whole to be reasonably justified. Of the 121 wards which were taken without a contest in 1974, but were contested this time, 98 were retained by the party which had previously held them. Independents lost 7, the SNP 1, Conservatives 1 and Labour 14 (including 8 to the SNP). Some of these changes were however merely on paper - due to incumbent candidates taking on or discarding a party label.

(iv) Women Candidates

In 1974, as would be expected in line with other evidence, women were poorly represented amongst candidates and councillors in Scotland. In that year only 369 (14.4%) of the 2,559 candidates were women. As can be seen from Table 6 there was a slight increase to 420 (16.3%) out of a total of 2,571 in 1977. Amongst the parties there was little change in the proportion of women candidates fielded this time. The Conservatives had the highest proportion (23.2%) and the Communists the lowest (10.0%). The 1977 elections also saw an increase in the number of successful women candidates - from 136 to 158, though this represented a similar proportion of all female candidates (37.6%). Men continued to be more likely to be elected - 44.6% of them were successful. Again we must stress that this does not necessarily mean that voters have a preference for men, or that women make poorer candidates. Indeed, as can be seen from Table 7, Independent women candidates were more likely to be elected than Independent male candidates, as they were in 1974. It would seem, then, that Scottish parties tend to select women to fight less promising seats and this may reflect some prejudice on their part. The proportion of successful women candidates for the Conservatives and the SNP increased markedly between 1974 and 1977 and that of successful Labour women fell. This is likely, however, to be a reflection of the overall performance of these parties in the elections.

2. TURNOUT

As was noted earlier, local elections have in the past been notorious for the relatively low level of participation on the part of electors. In the Scottish local elections of 1970, 1971 and 1972 for instance, turnout was 44.1%, 42.6% and 42.4% respectively. In 1974, when the first elections were held under the reorganised local government system, turnout was considerably higher at 51.4%. This improvement was, we think, largely effected by the increased participation of the parties who contribute to the mobilisation of the voters. The improvement was sustained in 1977, though turnout declined a little to 47.8%. Table 8 shows the turnout figure for each district and for regions as a whole. Grampian Region had the lowest turnout (36.1%) as in 1974, and the highest turnout is to be found in the Central Region (53.2%) which had the second highest in 1974. Turnout dropped in all regions, but the decline was especially marked in the Borders and Highland Regions (-13.6% and -12.3% respectively). The decline was smallest in Strathclyde and Dumfries and Galloway (-2.2% each).

At district level we find the lowest turnout was in Banff and Buchan (33.6%) and the highest in Sutherland (64.0%) though in the latter only 6 wards were contested. Turnout declined in all but 7 of the 53 districts, the exceptions being Midlothian (+0.1%), Stirling (+0.80%), Berwickshire (+3.6%), Motherwell (+3.6%), East Kilbride (+0.1%), Kilmarnock and Loudoun (+1.1%), and Wigtown (+2.5%). The similarity of the pattern of turnout levels across districts in the 1974 and 1977 elections is indicated by the fact that there was a correlation of .710 between district turnouts in 1974 and 1977. If we use the regression equation upon which this figure is based to 'predict' the 1977 turnout for each district on the basis of its 1974 turnout, and compare these 'predictions' with the actual turnout, some interesting patterns emerge. Firstly there are some marked regional variations. Of the 13 districts in the Highland and Grampian regions, 12 had turnouts lower than expected and the mean residual (actual minus 'predicted' turnout) for the 13 was -4.5%. On the other hand in Strathclyde 17 of the 19 districts had turnouts higher than expected (mean residual for the region being +3.2%). The other regions showed less definite patterns. It could be the case that some regional factor such as the state of the weather on polling day accounts for differences of this sort, but on the whole districts with lower than expected turnout tend to be rural areas and also areas where party competition is poorly developed. Thus one of the two districts in Strathclyde in which turnout fell by more than would be expected was Argyll and Bute (residual -2.9) while in Grampian the gap between predicted and actual turnout in Aberdeen (residual -4.8) was lower than that for the rest of the region (mean residual -4.4%). A final example is the Borders. Here, in the three districts where elections are dominated by Independents, the mean residual was -7.2 while in Berwickshire, where the Conservative Party contests elections, the residual was +9.3.

We attempted to account for variations in the way turnout changed in different districts by relating them to changes in the numbers of candidates put forward by the parties, but no significant relationship was found. Similarly, there were only weak correlations between changes in turnout and changes in the level of support for the main parties. The correlation between the change in the Labour share of the vote and the change in turnout was -.339, indicating that Labour lost most where turnout dropped least, while the correlation for change in the SNP share of the vote was +.311. Change in the Conservative share was hardly associated at all with changes in turnout, the correlation coefficient being +.197.

Variations in turnout and in turnout change from 1974 to 1977 at ward levels were, of course, larger than those at district level, and these provide considerable scope for further analysis. One can ask, for example, what effects the marginality of the ward or interventions and withdrawals by candidates have on turnout. We do not have space to explore problems such as these here, but we hope that others will use the detailed results to pursue further analysis.

3. PERFORMANCES OF PARTIES

Some of the topics discussed so far may be thought by some to be of largely academic interest. For most people the real interest of elections is in who wins or loses seats, and trends in party support. In this section we examine these two aspects of the Scottish district elections.

(i) Party Votes

Tables 9 and 10 show the distribution of votes amongst the parties. For convenience we reproduce here the figure for Scotland as a whole in 1974 and 1977.

Party Shares of Vote

	1974	1977
Con	26.8	27.2
Lab	38.4	31.6
Lib	5.0	4.0
SNP	12.4	24.2
Comm	1.0	0.7
Ind	14.1	9.8
Others	2.4	2.6
	100.1	100.1

Interpretation of these data is not straightforward for two main reasons. In the first place, as we noted above, they take no account of unopposed returns, so that where a candidate is unopposed his party is in a sense denied the votes that would (presumably) otherwise have been included in the total. Secondly, variations in candidatures produce distortions in the figures. We have seen, for example, that in 1977 there was a major increase in the number of SNP candidates, and this alone would be expected to result in an increased vote for the SNP.

Despite these problems there are a number of features of Table B which are worthy of comment. First of all there is a decline in the share of votes obtained by Independent candidates. Clearly a large part of this must be associated with the smaller number of Independent candidates and an increase in the proportion of them who were unopposed. Another factor contributing to the decline in Independents' share of the vote is the unusually large decrease in turnout in the Highland and Borders Regions, for many contests in these regions are wholly between Independent candidates. The decrease in the number of Independent candidates, in the share of votes they obtained and, as we shall see, in the number of seats they won suggests again that the Scottish district elections are tending to become more party-oriented.

Secondly, and perhaps more importantly, in the 1977 elections there was clearly a move away from Labour and towards the SNP with the Conservatives holding their ground. If 'swing' is calculated on the basis of the figures shown in Table B, then between 1974 and 1977 there was a swing of 3.6% from Labour to Conservative and of 9.3% from Labour to SNP. Swing is, however, a measure that is meaningful only in a clear two party situation. In Scotland as a whole this is obviously not the case and a more useful measure of changes in party support is the increase or decrease in votes received by each party as a percentage of the votes each received in the previous election. This measure is less familiar and less parsimonious than swing but it has some advantages in that it takes into account changes in turnout and does not measure a party's performance relative to other parties. It simply indicates the extent and direction of change in the votes a party receives, no matter the source of additional votes or the destination of lost votes.

In these terms, the change in the SNP vote between 1974 and 1977 was +86.2% as compared with a slight decline for the Conservatives (-3.2%) and major decreases in the Labour and Liberal votes (-21.5% and -23.0% respectively).

Given their dismal showing in the General Elections of 1974 and the way in which some observers had practically written them off as a political force in Scotland, the Conservative performance was very creditable. The Liberals, on the other hand, though winning more seats than in 1974, were reduced to near insignificance in terms of popular support. The setback suffered by Labour was not altogether unexpected. The 1974 elections coincided with a period of popularity for the Labour Party nationally. The Labour government which had been elected in February 1974 was still enjoying its 'honeymoon' with the electorate and the Gallup poll results for Britain as a whole in April 1974 showed Labour having a lead of 16% over the Conservatives. So far, this has been the peak of the present government's popularity. In the run-up to the 1977 elections, however, Labour's standing with the electorate was very poor and the Gallup poll for April showed a state of opinion almost exactly the reverse of that in 1974, with the Conservatives having a lead of 15.5%. In Scotland, after the General Election of 1974, when the SNP took over from the Conservatives as the second largest party in terms of votes, opinion polls regularly showed the three parties running about equal, though there were minor fluctuations from time to time. The decline of Labour's popularity was evidenced by the results in a series of local by-elections, some of which Labour lost spectacularly to the SNP.

In the 1977 elections it was the SNP which yet again hit the headlines with a major increase in votes. It is difficult to be precise about the real extent of the SNP's advance, however, for the increase in votes received is clearly in part merely a reflection of the increased number of SNP candidates in the 1977 elections. The most spectacular increases in SNP votes were in districts where there were large increases in the number of SNP candidates. Thus, if we separate out the 12 districts where the SNP fought half or more of the seats in 1974 and where, consequently, there was less scope for increasing votes simply by putting forward more candidates, the change in SNP votes was +32.1%. In the remaining 41 districts, the number of SNP candidates rose from 68 to 236 and votes increased by more than three hundred per cent.

We can attempt to be more specific about the effects of increased SNP candidacies by correlating the change in the percentage of candidates who stood for the SNP in each district with the change in the share of votes obtained by the SNP. Excluding the districts where there were no SNP candidates in either 1974 and 1977, this yields a correlation of coefficient of .840 (N=42) which means that over 70% of the variation in the changes in the SNP's share of the vote is accounted for simply by variations in the number of candidates put forward ( $r^2 = .706$ ). Examination of residuals in this case helps us to pinpoint districts where the SNP did very well even taking into account changes in candidatures. In these terms the SNP did best in Cunningham (+9.4), Nairn (+9.3), Nithsdale (+9.2), Kirkcaldy (+5.5), Dumbarton (+4.2) and Glasgow (+4.0). The Nairn and Nithsdale figures are, however, freakish due to the number of unopposed Independents in these districts. On the other hand the SNP did worse than would be expected in Dunfermline (-9.7), Aberdeen (-8.4), Bearsden and Milngavie (-7.5) and Eastwood (-7.0).

One way of trying to control for variations in candidatures is to look at trends in party support in wards in which the alignment of major party candidates was the same in both 1974 and 1977. Ignoring all candidates other than Conservative, Labour and SNP three kinds of contests can be considered, viz., Conservative v Labour v SNP, Conservative v Labour and Labour v SNP.

Table C shows the distribution of votes among the three parties and the percentage change in their votes in wards contested by all three on both occasions.

TABLE C
Shares of Votes in Wards Contested by Lab, Con and SNP (N=81)

	1974	1977	Change in Votes
Con	31.9	34.6	+7.1
Lab	40.7	31.1	-24.5
SNP	27.4	34.3	+23.9

In these wards Labour was clearly predominant in 1974 but lost about one-quarter of their votes in 1977 to end in third place behind the other two parties. The increase in SNP votes, by 23.9%, is a more realistic assessment of their advance since 1974 than the overall figure of over 80% given above. These data can be broken down further by looking at the change in each party's votes in seats held by each of them in 1974. This is done in Table D.

Percentage Change in Party Votes

	Con-held wards (22)	Lab-held wards (49)	SNP-held wards (7)
Con	+9.4%	-0.2%	+28.9%
Lab	-24.3%	-26.0%	+0.4%
SNP	+23.3%	+26.2%	-4.6%

Labour lost about equally, and the SNP gained about the same, in Conservative and Labour wards. In SNP-held wards, however, that party actually lost support while Labour improved a little and the Conservatives increased their votes substantially. This may suggest that incumbency leads to a loss of support or that in these seats the SNP has reached the peak of its support. But only seven wards are involved and we would hesitate to deduce any firm trend from their results.

Table E shows the results in the 135 wards contested by the Conservatives and Labour in both elections and in which there were no SNP candidates on either occasion.

TABLE E
Share of Votes in Wards Contested by Con and Lab (N=135)

	1974 %	1977 %	Change in Votes
Con	54.5	60.3	+1.7%
Lab	45.5	39.7	-19.8%

The movement away from Labour was rather less than in the three-way contests. The figures for shares of votes indicate a 'swing' of only 5.8% from Labour to Conservative in these wards, which is a rather good performance by Labour given the favourable circumstances of the 1974 elections and the unpopularity of the government in 1977.

Finally, Table F also shows that in Labour versus SNP contests there was a relatively small swing and relatively small changes in votes. Interestingly, in the 28 of these wards that were SNP-held in 1974 the change in votes was even smaller - Labour votes falling by just 4.7% and SNP's votes increasing by only 4.4%. This conforms with the suggestion made above that in SNP-held wards the Nationalists made little advance in the 1977 elections.

TABLE F

Share of Votes in Wards Contested by Lab and SNP (N=80)

	1974 %	1977 %	Change in Votes
Lab	52.2	47.3	-9.5%
SNP	47.8	52.7	+10.3%

The problems associated with variations in the numbers of candidates put forward and uncontested returns make it very difficult to undertake any very extensive analysis of trends in party support in the individual districts or to compare trends in different districts. Despite these difficulties, however, our data show that the distribution of support across districts in 1977 was very similar to the pattern of 1974. In the case of the three main parties the correlations between the share of the vote they received in each district in 1974 and the share obtained in 1977 were strong. If we exclude districts where they had no candidates at either election, the correlation coefficient for the Conservatives was +.895 (N=41), for Labour +.902 (N=45) and for the SNP +.847 (N=42). In other words, where a party did comparatively well last time it did so again; where it lagged in 1974 it did relatively poorly in 1977. The coefficient for the SNP is the lowest. This is because the SNP had most variations in candidatures between 1974 and 1977. Indeed, deviations between the share of the vote 'predicted' for each party on the basis of its 1974 performance and the actual percentage received can be explained almost entirely in terms of changes in candidatures.

(ii) Seats Won

From one point of view it could be argued that it is not the votes that parties obtain that really matter but how many seats are won. In a first-past-the-post electoral system there can sometimes be considerable discrepancies between share of votes received and proportion of seats won, especially when three or more parties have roughly equal support amongst electors. Detailed figures of the numbers of seats won by each party in each district are given in Table 11. The table below summarises these for Scotland as a whole and for comparison the 1974 figures are also given. (The difference in the totals is due to the fact that in 1974 some elections were postponed because there were no candidates or for some other reason). Though Labour remains the largest political party in Scotland in terms of district council seats held, it is clear that the 1977 elections witnessed a major turnover of seats (see Table 12). This had major consequences for party control of districts.

After the 1974 election, Labour had clear control of 17 districts, the Conservatives 5 and the SNP 1. In the remaining districts there was either a majority of Independents or no single party with more than 50% of the seats. The position now is that in only 18 of the 53 districts is there a party with an overall majority. The Conservatives are in this position in 8 (Angus, Bearsden and Milngavie, Berwickshire, Eastwood, Edinburgh, North-East Fife, Kyle and Carrick and Perth and Kinross), the SNP in 4 (Clackmannan, Cumbernauld and Kilsyth, East Kilbride and Falkirk), the Liberals in 1 (Inverclyde) and Labour in only 5 (Cumnock and Doon Valley, Dunfermline, East Lothian, Monklands and Motherwell). In some of the remaining districts it is possible that one or other of the parties will find sympathetic allies to assist them to have a majority, in others the divided nature of the opposition will enable the largest party to take control; and in some there may be agreement about who is to form the 'administration'. Thus the Conservatives, with a minority of seats, have formed an 'administration' in Glasgow, and the same is true of the SNP in Cunningham. We do not, however, have comprehensive data for arrangements of this kind and so are unable to produce a definitive list of controlling parties in all districts.

The districts we listed above as having one party in clear control include few surprises. The Conservative districts are heavily rural or urban middle class areas. The SNP have long been strong in the new towns of East Kilbride and Cumbernauld; Clackmannan forms part of a parliamentary constituency held by the SNP and Falkirk is also in an area of established SNP strength. The Liberals have in the past controlled Greenock, which forms the bulk of Inverclyde, usually, as in these elections, aided by minimal Conservative opposition. It is worth stressing, however, that Labour in Scotland now have overall majorities only in mining and heavily industrialised strongholds, having lost their grip on formerly solidly Labour towns such as Kilmarnock and Clydebank, and that they do not have a majority of seats in any of the four cities.

(iii) Minor Parties and 'Others'

Local elections provide an opportunity for a variety of minor parties, localized groups and concerned, aggrieved or eccentric individuals to bring their points of view to the attention of the electorate. Unlike parliamentary elections there is no deposit to be forfeited in local elections should a candidate receive only a minimal amount of support. Providing that an individual can obtain the signatures of ten electors consenting to his nomination, he can stand for election. (Interestingly, in ward 3 in Aberdeen a Communist candidate, having presumably obtained 10 signatures, received only 9 votes).

Table 13 shows in detail the number of candidates put forward, the votes received and the seats won by parties and groups described elsewhere as 'others'.

These 'Others' seem to fall into four main categories. Firstly there are genuine parties. The Scottish Labour Party which broke away from the Labour Party, the Scottish Labour Party (Dundee) which itself broke away from the SLP and perhaps Scottish Socialists, a further left group, might be said to be recognizable political parties. Secondly, there are in some areas the remains of local Moderates, Progressives and so on, who formed the main opposition to Labour in local government before the Conservatives became involved in a major way. Thirdly there are individuals who, for one reason or another, have been denied or disavow their party label and stand as Independent Labour, Independent Conservative and so on. Finally, there are local groups with special interests such as the Electors' Association for a Fair Deal for Airdrie.

Clearly in Scotland the Labour Party has more problems with dissidents than its opponents. There are many more Independent Labour candidates than Independent Conservatives or whatever, and the SLP was at one time regarded as a serious potential threat to Labour. In fact the SLP did rather poorly in these elections. They won only 3 seats, two of them in Cumnock and Doon Valley, the base of the party's leading figure, Mr. Jim Sillars M.P., and one in Clydebank, in a ward which the SNP did not contest. Indeed, in the 18 wards in which SLP candidates faced both Labour and SNP candidates, their major competitors for support, the SLP obtained only 13.6% of the votes given to the three parties.

(4) Forms of Local Politics<sup>1</sup>

The 53 Scottish districts vary enormously in their population, resources, degree of urbanisation, housing structure, social-demographic composition and so on. They also vary in the manner in which local politics are conducted. Clearly the former influence the latter, but an interesting, and it seems to us, crucial factor in this variation is the extent to which party competition is developed in the local political system.

The part political parties play in local government is a subject that has been much debated. The debate arises from two conflicting views of how local authorities ought to be run, which we may term the 'consensus' view and the 'party government' view. The consensus approach assumes that local politics is basically a question of generally like-minded individuals overseeing the administration of local affairs. Candidates should be supported on the basis of their personal qualities and characteristics and, once elected, should represent local communities, not a party viewpoint. The party government view suggests that local issues are matters over which there is, and should be, overt partisan conflict. Candidates should stand as party representatives and not entirely on their merits as individuals; and parties should seek to control authorities in order to implement their own distinctive policies. By its proponents this system is seen as the best way of combining efficiency with responsible government. Parties simplify and structure the choices presented to the voters, carry out on their behalf the tasks of making policy, regulating the work of local officials and they may periodically be removed or retained in office on the basis of their performances when they have to defend their record in elections.

How do the Scottish districts fit these two models of local politics? Clearly there is a sort of continuum running from the consensus view at one end to party government at the other, and it is instructive to try to locate the position of the Scottish districts on it. There seem to us to be three major categories of districts - 'partisan' districts, where the party government model clearly applies and parties dominate local politics, 'non-partisan' districts, where the consensus view seems a more accurate reflection of the style of local politics and 'intermediate' districts which fall somewhere between these. As an indicator of the nature of local politics in each district we have taken the percentages of seats won by Independent candidates in the two elections held so far under the reorganized system of local government. The smaller the proportion of seats won by Independent, as opposed to party candidates, the more closely a district may be said to approximate to the party government model. We use seats rather than votes, for as we have repeatedly emphasised, the latter are distorted by unopposed returns. The actual percentage figures we have taken as 'cut-off' points are, inevitably, somewhat arbitrary, but they provide a rather firmer guideline than simple subjective assignment of districts to one category or the other.

We define partisan districts as those in which Independents gained 20% of the seats or less in both 1974 and 1977. According to this criterion the following 26 districts can be described as partisan.

Partisan Districts

Aberdeen	Strathkelvin
Dundee	Cumbernauld
Kirkcaldy	Monklands
Dunfermline	Motherwell
West Lothian	Hamilton
Edinburgh	East Kilbride
Midlothian	Eastwood
East Lothian	Renfrew
Clackmannan	Inverclyde
Stirling	Cunningham
Falkirk	Kilmarnock and Loudoun
Glasgow	Kyle and Carrick
Clydebank	Cumnock and Doon Valley

At the consensus end of the continuum, we define non-partisan districts as those in which Independents gained more than 80% of the seats in both 1974 and 1977. This definition comprehends 13 districts as follows:-

Non-Partisan Districts

Caithness	Kincardine and Deeside
Sutherland	Tweeddale
Ross and Cromarty	Ettrick and Lauderdale
Skye and Lochalsh	Merrick
Badenoch and Strathespey	Stewartry
Moray	Annandale and Eskdale
Banff and Buchan

In contrast to the partisan districts, all of the non-partisan districts lie on the Scottish periphery. On the one hand 8 are in the Highland or Grampian Regions, while 5 are in the Borders or Dumfries and Galloway Regions.

All other districts, that is, those with between 20.0% and 80.0% Independent councillors, we classify as intermediate.

Intermediate Districts

Lochaber	Roxburgh
Inverness	Berwickshire
Nairn	Argyll
Gordon	Dumbarton
Angus	Bearsden and Milngavie
Perth and Kinross	Lanark
North East Fife	Nithsdale

In order to describe the trend in party competition in each of these categories the table below shows some summary statistics relating to the performances of Independents in 1974 and 1977. Between these elections the parties made little headway in the non-partisan districts, but in partisan districts Independents had even less success in 1977 than in 1974. Notably too, there were substantial reductions in the strength of Independents in Intermediate districts, suggesting that in these the party government view of local politics is making progress.

Table H

% Votes Independent	4.8	2.7	39.7	29.3	87.5	87.7

The role of parties in sustaining participation is clearly illustrated by the figures in Table I, which show the percentage of wards contested and the turnout in each of the three categories in both 1974 and 1977. In non-partisan districts there was a major drop in turnout and in the number of contested wards between the two elections. By contrast, in partisan districts the proportion of wards contested rose, and turnout declined by only 2.3%.

The party government conception of local politics has long been dominant in highly urbanised areas where the size of the population makes the non-partisan system, based as it is on electors' personal knowledge of the candidates, inappropriate. The reorganisation of local government in Scotland removed local councils from numerous small burghs which had a non-partisan tradition, and in the enlarged districts the party government view seems very quickly to have taken root. The party government model best describes the local political system in 26 of the Scottish districts which together contain 76.7% of the Scottish electorate. Only 8.5% of the electorate live in non-partisan districts. The remaining districts are probably in a process of evolution. In some, such as Dumbarton and Bearsden and Milngavie, party competition is already well developed and it is likely that the Independent tradition will die fairly rapidly. In others, however, the adjustment to a new form of local politics more congruent with the structures of government created by reorganisation is likely to be a more lengthy process.

SCOTTISH GOVERNMENT
YEARBOOK 1978

Paul Harris Publishing, Edinburgh

announce the publication in November 1977 of

THE SCOTTISH GOVERNMENT
YEARBOOK 1978

Edited by Dr Henry M. Drucker (Head of Politics Department, University of Edinburgh) and Michael G. Clarke (Deputy Director of Policy Planning, Lothian Region), this is the first of what is to be a series of annual volumes surveying the state and development of politics in Scotland over the previous year. Prepared under the auspices of the University of Edinburgh Unit for the Study of Government in Scotland, it is an essential reference tool for anyone researching into British Government at this crucial time in the devolution debate. All libraries will want at least one copy on their shelves for reference.

Contents of the book include papers on the role of the Secretary of State for Scotland (Rt. Hon. William Ross, M.P.), the Scottish Development Agency, Opposition in Local Government, public health and housing, analysis of the May 1977 Local Election Results, Bibliography of more than 1,200 publications on Scottish Government and appendices dealing with the structure of the Scottish Office and Scottish Local Government.

An essential reference work

Format: Hardback with dust jacket, 9 x 5.75 in., 280 pp., approx., ISBN 0 904505 32 4. Price £7.50.
