INTRODUCTION

This volume reports on the fifth round of district elections since Scottish local government was reorganised in 1974, and it is the eighth in our series on Scottish local elections. That we have been able to maintain publication is very largely due to the support that we have received from the regular purchasers of our publications.

The installation of a new mainframe computer at the University of Dundee rendered our old computer program obsolete and this is the first of our publications produced on a personal computer. We are grateful to the University of Dundee for a grant from its Research Initiative Fund to John Bochel for the purpose of having a new, more flexible and more sophisticated program written. Dr Terry Burke of the University of Dundee undertook the daunting task of converting our detailed and demanding specifications into a usable program. We are most grateful to him for the immense effort he put into the job. To find a computer expert prepared to speak our language and to understand our problems and still remain in good humour is unusual; to find one who developed an interest in our subject was a real bonus.

There were few significant changes in boundaries for this round of elections and these all occurred in Grampian region. Gordon acquired four new wards and there were consequential changes in most of the existing wards. In the circumstances it did not seem appropriate to record gains and losses in that district. Aberdeen also acquired three new wards; unusually these were filled at by-elections at the time of the 1986 regional elections and they are treated as if they were in the hands of the incumbent party since 1984.

A revised and corrected account of the Regional Division, Westminster and European Constituencies composition is given in Appendices 2, 4 and 5.

As usual this volume is organised in four sections viz. the Introduction; a Commentary on the results and an analysis of trends; detailed results are given for all districts; and finally we produce the regular Summary Tables and Appendices, all of which are comparable with earlier presentations.

Women candidates are identified by the prefix Ms and the following additional symbols are used:

INCREASED COMPLEXITY AND COMPETITIVENESS

The Scottish District Elections held on 5th May 1988 were the first electoral test for the parties in Scotland since the 1987 general election. In that election voting behaviour in Scotland deviated even more sharply from that in the rest of the country than hitherto. Whilst the Conservatives more or less held their own and Labour failed to make headway elsewhere, in Scotland Conservative support slumped to only 24 per cent of the vote and they won only ten of the 72 seats - their worst performance ever. From an already strong position Labour advanced to 42.4 per cent of the vote and won 50 seats; the SNP made a modest recovery (14 per cent of the vote and three seats), and the Alliance slipped back to 19.2 per cent of the vote while increasing its tally of seats to nine.

After their 1987 debacle the Conservatives sought to go on the offensive in Scotland. A review of party organisation was undertaken and radical changes were implemented. Scottish ministers and Mrs Thatcher herself began to preach aggressively the relevance of Thatcherism for Scotland. Few, if any policy changes seemed to be contemplated, however. The party remained firmly anti-devolutionist and the obviously unpopular poll-tax or community charge was to be introduced first in Scotland. The latter became the central issue in the 1988 local election campaign. One year was probably too short a time to see any significant results from the reform of party organisation or attempts to change political attitudes in Scotland. So the local elections became, to a large extent, a chance for Scots to pronounce a verdict on the proposed tax.

For the former Alliance parties the elections were also an important test. The formation of the Social and Liberal Democrats from the former Liberal party and a section of the SDP was a lengthy and rather messy business, and inevitably support in the opinion polls for the new party fell compared with that for the dissolved Alliance. Time was short for the new party to expect to make headway in the local elections. For the SLD, then, a holding operation must have been the most optimistic aspiration.

Having made some headway in the 1987 general election, the SNP was subsequently encouraged by good figures in Scottish opinion polls and some successes in local by-elections. It was vigorously opposed to the poll-tax and, unlike Labour, it was relatively united in its policy of non-payment as a means of resistance. The SNP had grounds for expecting to consolidate and advance upon its 1987 performance.

As ever, the Labour party could only hope to maintain its position in these elections. Since the reorganisation of Scottish local government in 1974 Labour had established a position of overwhelming predominance in the Regions and Districts. After the 1984 district elections Labour-controlled authorities contained three-quarters of the Scottish electorate. Labour was equally dominant in parliamentary elections and in 1987 had won almost 70 per cent of the seats. Clearly something quite extraordinary needs to happen to threaten Labour's position in Scottish politics.

Local elections are not, however, simply gigantic opinion polls recording voters' current preferences amongst the parties, although this is a tenable view of them. These elections do decide who runs local affairs and, in these days of seemingly perpetual conflict between central and local government, and despite the limits placed on the discretion of local authorities, that is important. Local election results over time are also of intrinsic interest to those concerned with the developing pattern of party competition, levels of participation and trends in party support in Scotland. It is these themes that we wish to pursue in what follows.

FORMS OF LOCAL POLITICS

We have in the past distinguished Scottish districts by the level of party competition in them. We identified three categories namely, (a) Partisan districts, in which party competition is the norm and councils are run on party lines, (b) Non-partisan districts, in which Independents predominate and (c) Intermediate or Mixed districts which fall somewhere between the first two categories. Table A presents our categorisation of the 53 districts for the five sets of elections since 1974.

Table A: Forms of Local Politics in Scottish Districts 1974-88

| | 1974 | 1977 | 1980 | 1984 | 1988 |
|------------------------|------|------|------|------|------|
| Partisan Districts | 27 | 26 | 32 | 34 | 34 |
| Mixed Districts | 9 | 14 | 7 | 6 | 9 |
| Non-Partisan Districts | 17 | 13 | 14 | 13 | 10 |

Reorganisation resulted in much greater party interest and involvement in local elections than before and, as the table indicates, the level of partisanship has grown steadily since 1974. The number of non-partisan districts has now fallen to only ten, and these are very small (in terms of population) and on the geographical periphery. The current categorisation of all districts is given in Appendix 1 of this report. It is important to note that all data relating to this categorisation refers to the current categorisation. Even where figures are given for previous years these are calculated on the basis of the current 34 partisan, 9 mixed and 10 non-partisan districts.

CANDIDATES

Table B presents the number of candidates put forward by the different parties and groups at each set of district elections. 1988 showed the continuation of an upward trend which produced over 3,000 for the first time. The increase is entirely attributable to the growing involvement of the parties and indicates that, in this respect at least, the health of local democracy continues to improve.

Table B: Numbers of Candidates in Scottish Districts 1974-88

| | 1974 | 1977 | 1980 | 1984 | 1988 |
|------------------|------|------|------|------|------|
| Conservatives | 539 | 543 | 547 | 571 | 626 |
| Labour | 753 | 719 | 765 | 830 | 870 |
| Lib/Alliance/SLD | 148 | 136 | 153 | 417 | 333 |

| Scotland Total | 2560 | 2571 | 2452 | 2835 | 3130 |

One of the weaknesses of Conservative organisation at local level in Scotland was the relatively low number of candidates they put forward at district and regional elections, certainly in comparison with Labour. This had a knock-on effect at Parliamentary elections because the local electoral machines were at best rusty and sometimes non-existent. Efforts were obviously made to remedy this and as a consequence local Conservative parties fielded a record number of candidates in 1988. The hope was not only to reactivate local organisations, but also to have as many candidates as possible to spread the Conservative message. Although Labour could hardly expect to add to the number of district councils that it controlled, encouraged by some good results in unlikely places at the general election, it sought to improve its performance in some hitherto hostile territory. As a consequence it too fielded a record number of candidates. The SNP clearly perceived that its fortunes were on an upturn, morale had improved and so it was easier to attract candidates. These factors led to a spectacular increase in the number of candidates nominated (+276) and for the first it had more than the Conservatives. The break-up of the Alliance and the recent fraught birth of the SLD resulted in the new party having fewer candidates (333) than the combined Alliance total of 417 in 1984. It was still a creditable effort when we note that about half of the decline reflects our decision to treat the SDP (Continuing) candidates in 1988 as 'others'.

A detailed breakdown of candidacies is given in Summary Table 3. Overall, big increases in the number of candidates were recorded in Grampian (+85) and in Fife (+57) where all four major parties had more than in 1984. Strathclyde also had an increase in candidatures (+67) largely because of a major drive by the SNP (+90). The total number of candidates rose in every region except Tayside which was also the only one in which the number of Conservative nominees fell.

Summary Table 4 which shows the proportion of wards contested by each party indicates that Central region is a problem for the Conservatives. They contested fewer than half the seats in this intensely partisan area, but nevertheless won a bigger share of the vote there than they did in Strathclyde where they contested nearly two thirds of the wards. Whether this weakness emanates from the reluctance of Conservatives to stand for election or from the absence of active local organisations is, presumably, the kind of question that must be faced by Conservative Central Office. The SLD is also very weak in Central region as it is too in Tayside and Strathclyde.

The decline in the number of Independent candidates has continued unabated since reorganisation in 1974. Table C shows that they now constitute a tiny minority in partisan districts, whilst in non-partisan districts, in which they were in a near monopolistic position, the major parties are making quite large incursions; in mixed districts the intervention of parties in 1988 was very substantial and here the Independents declined to less than half of all candidates for the first time. It seems likely that in this last category there will be a slow but steady move towards partisan local politics.

Table C: Independents as a proportion of All Candidates 1974-88

| | 1974 % | 1977 % | 1980 % | 1984 % | 1988 % |
|-----------------------------|-----------|-----------|-----------|-----------|-----------|
| Partisan Districts (34) | 10.7 | 7.1 | 5.1 | 3.3 | 3.0 |
| Mixed Districts (9) | 73.7 | 72.7 | 64.8 | 62.1 | 44.3 |

UNCONTESTED ELECTIONS AND PARTY COMPETITION

Uncontested returns have long disappeared in parliamentary elections, and indeed, with the exception of Ulster, it is normal for the major parties to nominate candidates in all constituencies. But uncontested elections still persist at local level. Two major factors may account for this. Firstly there is the sheer number of wards - well over a thousand in the Scottish districts - for which candidates must be found. Nominating a candidate and mounting a campaign presupposes, or should, the existence of a ward party organisation and some resources of personnel and finance. It is very doubtful whether any of our parties has a viable organisation in every ward in Scotland, and so gaps inevitably arise in party slates. Secondly, the rewards for local government service are few and the costs, in time, career prospects and disruption to family life are not inconsiderable. It is natural therefore that many civic minded people are reluctant to seek elected office. Of course many people do wish to serve as local councillors, and some even claim to enjoy campaigning in elections. But very often calls upon party loyalty and the promised support of the party machine are required to persuade party members to stand as candidates. There are, however, no such pressures for Independents and self-motivation is becoming increasingly rare. Parties do, however, have incentives to contest seats even where they have no prospects of winning. Headquarters are likely to argue that the electoral machine requires exercise, that party supporters should have a candidate to vote for, that the maximisation of the vote on a national scale is now important as a measure of party strength and so on. If electoral competition is good, then partisan politics contributes to a healthy political system.

Table D demonstrates that electoral competition is thriving. Overall the proportion of wards contested in 1988 was the largest since reorganisation, but competition is uneven. Partisan districts have had a large and growing proportion of contests, but after an initial increase in competition in 1974, non-partisan districts have never had more than forty percent of wards contested; mixed or intermediate districts have had an inconsistent level of competition, but 1988 saw a sharp increase to almost three-quarters of the wards contested.

| | 1974 % | 1977 % | 1980 % | 1984 % | 1988 % |
|------------------------|-----------|-----------|-----------|-----------|-----------|
| Partisan Districts | 86.3 | 88.0 | 88.3 | 91.3 | 95.9 |
| Mixed Districts | 64.3 | 51.9 | 43.6 | 52.2 | 73.3 |
| Non-Partisan Districts | 53.8 | 36.6 | 20.7 | 27.5 | 40.0 |
| Scotland Total | 79.5 | 77.9 | 74.0 | 78.3 | 86.1 |

The form that these contests have taken is shown in Table E. The most significant long-term change has been the steady increase in major party contests and this accelerated sharply in 1988. Almost three-quarters of all district wards had contested elections involving two or more of the major parties compared with just over half in 1974. Wards in which the major parties were entirely absent declined to twelve percent of the total. In 1988 too, there was a marked decline in the number of wards in which major party candidates were returned unopposed. Apart from the Independents Labour was again the major beneficiary of unopposed returns, having had 30 councillors elected without challenge.

Table E: Patterns of Competition in District Wards 1974-88

| | 1974 % | 1977 % | 1980 % | 1984 % | 1988 % |

| Major Party Uncontested | 9.0 | 8.0 | 9.0 | 9.0 | 5.0 |

Another aspect of competition patterns is shown in Table F. More than ninety per cent of all the wards in partisan districts had major party contests. The spread of party activity is illustrated by the fact that even in non-partisan districts thirty per cent of wards had at least one major party candidate.

Table F: Patterns of Competition in Partisan, Mixed and Non-Partisan Districts 1988

| | All Districts | Partisan Districts | Mixed Districts | Partisan Districts | Non- Partisan Districts |

| Major Party Uncontested | 5.0 | 4.0 | | 9.0 | 7.0 |

* - less than 1%

The changing nature of party contests is illustrated in Table G. Two-way contests, which were far and away the most common in 1974, have declined pretty steadily and significantly. In particular, straight fights between Labour and the Conservatives, which were again the most common, are now relatively rare. The increase in Conservative V Labour V SNP contests is a direct function of the larger number of SNP candidates. This also explains why, despite the fall in the number of SLD candidates, the proportion of four-way contests reached a high point of twenty-three per cent of contests in 1988.

Table G: Selected Types of Party Contests in District Wards 1974-88

| Con V Lab V Lib/All/SLD V SNP | 3.0 | 6.0 | 6.0 | 21.0 | 23.0 |

In 1988 the steady trend towards a complex and competitive four-party system continued. The nomination of candidates is but one aspect of elections however, winning votes and their conversion into seats is quite another as we demonstrate below.

TURNOUT

Turnout in district elections has only once exceeded 50 per cent of those eligible to vote. That was in 1974 in the first round of elections following reorganisation. In that year both District and Regional elections were held simultaneously and this, along with the novelty of the new structures and attendant publicity, stimulated an unusual amount of interest. Since then, as can be seen from Table H turnout declined slowly, but consistently until 1988 which witnessed a small, but welcome increase. Only in Borders did turnout decline.

Table H: Turnout in Scottish Districts 1974-88

| 1974 | 1977 | 1980 | 1984 | 1988 |
|------|------|------|------|------|
| 51.4 | 47.8 | 45.7 | 44.4 | 45.5 |

It is impossible to be dogmatic about the reasons for this reversal of a fairly long-term trend. The only obvious difference between this and other sets of district elections was that one issue, the Poll Tax, dominated the campaign. Whilst this may have had some influence upon the behaviour of those who voted, it could hardly be said to have shaken the other half out of its lethargy. The most likely explanation is that the considerably greater level of electoral competition with its increased amount of party activity levered a slightly larger proportion of electors out to cast their votes. There were the usual variations in turnout amongst regions and within them. Grampian escaped from its habitual bottom place in the turnout league to be replaced by Borders. There was a change at the top too, with Lothian producing a turnout of 52.4 per cent and forcing Central from its usual top position into second place.

Of the districts however, Stirling continued its series of above average turnouts with 57.7 per cent of electors voting, but it was bettered this time by Bearsden & Milngavie which managed 59.8 per cent. Banff and Buchan surrendered the wooden spoon to its neighbour Gordon in 1988.

Turnout in Scottish local government elections is consistently higher than in comparable English elections and those of 1988 were no exception. The English Metropolitan Districts produced a turnout of only 38.8 per cent and the Non-Metropolitan Districts 41.6 per cent. (See C Rallings and M Thrasher, 1988)

TRENDS IN PARTY SUPPORT

Table I shows the distribution of votes at all district elections between 1974 and 1988. These are 'raw' figures which do not take account of the number of candidates put forward by the different parties or groups. On these data the Conservatives dropped to their lowest level of support ever in district elections and the same can be said of their results in 1980 and 1984. On this occasion too, the Conservatives were pushed into third place by the SNP which improved its share of the vote by almost 10 percentage points compared with 1984.

Table I: Party Shares of Votes in Scottish Districts 1974 - 1988

| | 1974 % | 1977 % | 1980 % | 1984 % | 1988 % |
|--------------|-----------|-----------|-----------|-----------|-----------|
| Conservative | 26.8 | 27.2 | 24.1 | 21.4 | 19.4 |
| Labour | 38.4 | 31.6 | 45.4 | 45.7 | 42.6 |
| Lib/All/SLD | 5.0 | 4.0 | 6.2 | 12.8 | 8.4 |
| SNP | 12.4 | 24.2 | 15.5 | 11.7 | 21.3 |
| Independent | 14.1 | 9.8 | 6.7 | 6.8 | 6.4 |
| Others | 3.4 | 3.3 | 2.2 | 1.6 | 2.0 |

The SLD emerged in a position half-way between the Alliance performance in 1984 and the Liberals' in 1980. Although there was a small decline in Labour's share of the vote its dominance was hardly dented. In three successive sets of district elections it has had around twice the number of votes obtained by the next placed party.

An analysis of the distribution of party support in the three categories of districts (Table J) reveals, not surprisingly, that the results in partisan districts closely reflect the overall figures, with a nine point rise in SNP support, a five point fall for the SLD and small decreases for Labour and the Conservatives. There is distinctly more variation in mixed and non-partisan districts, but in both the Independents suffered sharp declines and the SNP made its largest gains, benefitting as it did from its increased number of candidates.

As we have cautioned before, the varying patterns of candidatures and the number of uncontested divisions can significantly affect the levels of party support. More precise and probably more reliable estimates of the ebb and flow of support can be obtained by examining those wards in which the pattern of candidatures was identical in two successive elections.

In Table K we report the results in three types of contest, those in which the four main parties all nominated candidates, contests in which there were Conservative, Labour and SNP candidates and those in which there were straight fights between Labour and the SNP. The results in the four-way contests confirm that there was a genuine increase in support for the SNP. The overall figures are not simply a result of increased SNP candidacies. By the same token there was 'real' decline in SLD support. An analysis of the three-way contests leads to the same conclusion, with the SNP advancing, apparently at the expense of Labour and the Conservatives. A study of two-way contests shows that Labour lost ground to the SNP.

Together these data which, it should be remembered, control for the number of candidates, enable us to say with confidence that the 1988 district elections saw a marked revival in support for the SNP and a decline for the SLP. Conservative support fell a little from an already very small base, and Labour at best stood still, but suffered a slight decline overall. The comfort for Labour was that the small loss it suffered was in relation to a record performance in 1984 and that its remarkable dominance of local government in Scotland was not in any obvious danger of erosion.

COUNCIL SEATS WON

Labour's dominance in terms of votes has also brought a rich harvest of seats won. It advanced to (yet another) new record with almost twice as many seats as the next largest grouping, the Independents, and more than three times the number of the Conservatives. The Conservatives now hold fewer seats than at any time since reorganisation in 1974. The SNP, in line with the improvement in its share of the vote, nearly doubled its tally of seats, although this is still a long way from its 1977 performance. More surprisingly, despite a reduced share of the vote, the SLD came out of the election with an increased number of seats, but this was entirely due to their success in two small districts, Gordon (+8) and Annandale and Eskdale (+4). The decline in Independent representation continued and they now have one third fewer seats than they had fourteen years ago.

Labour gained majority control in two districts, Clydesdale and Kyle & Carrick, but lost its majority in three others, Stirling, Dumbarton and Cumbernauld & Kilsyth. The first and last of these were tied and Labour retained control by lot. The Conservatives lost one of the four districts that they controlled, Kyle and Carrick to Labour. The SLD added control of Gordon to North East Fife, while the SNP retained power in Angus. Independents lost their majority in four districts, Moray, Kincardine & Deeside, Annandale & Eskdale and Inverness, and regained a majority in two others Banff & Buchan and Roxburgh.

Party Control of the 53 districts is now as follows:

Women Candidates and Councillors

Since 1974 we have regularly charted the progress of women in becoming candidates and councillors. Progress there has been, but it is painfully slow. As Table N shows fewer than a quarter of all candidates and only 20 per cent of councillors were women in 1988, and Summary Table 7 confirms that women candidates as a whole stand less chance than men of being elected.

Table N: Women Candidates and Councillors as a Proportion of All Candidates and Councillors in Scottish Districts 1974-88.

| | 1974 % | 1977 % | 1980 % | 1984 % | 1988 % |
|-------------------|-----------|-----------|-----------|-----------|-----------|
| Women Candidates | 14.4 | 16.3 | 17.8 | 21.6 | 23.5 |
| Women Councillors | 12.9 | 14.1 | 14.3 | 17.1 | 19.6 |

Only amongst SLD and Independent candidates do women outperform men. There is no evidence to suggest that women are less capable than men of winning votes. The problem seems to be that there are not enough women candidates in the first place and, for a variety of reasons, those that are available are not given a high enough proportion of winnable seats by their parties. Independent women candidates who, as it were, select themselves, have since 1974 always been elected in higher proportions than Independent men.

Of the major parties Labour has the lowest proportion of women candidates and the Conservatives and SLD have the equal highest (Summary Table 6). But because of Labour's dominance in elections over 40 per cent of women councillors are Labour, twice the number for any other party.

We look forward to the time when this kind of analysis is no longer necessary. In the meantime it is pleasing to note that our data on women have been of interest to political scientists (see Shudlar and Welsh, 1987). It is now the turn of the political parties to take note and to act.

Minor Parties and Others

Local elections provide an opportunity for small parties to gain electoral experience and to 'test the water' without the need to find the deposit required in parliamentary elections. Disaffected or disgruntled individuals or groups with a specific local cause can also appeal to the voters, although not many succeed in winning seats.

We have, for this election, retained the SDP in our main tables because of the interest in comparing their fortunes with those of the SLD. The SDP did the best of the minor parties, but won only one seat and, for what it is worth, their average vote per candidate was 129 compared with 175 for the SLD. The Green Party had ten fewer candidates than its predecessor the Ecology Party had in 1984, but the average vote per candidate almost doubled. In 1974 the Communist Party had 128 candidates and won more than 15,000 votes; in 1988 it put forward only twenty-one candidates and lost the one seat that it held. There were more Independent Labour candidates than ever before (28). These are frequently councillors who have not been reselected by their local parties. Although not by any standard a party, Independent Labour candidates were by far the most successful of the 'others', nine of them becoming councillors.

Conclusion

Local Government in Britain is very much on the defensive just now. Councils see their powers diminishing, the range of services they administer contracting, their discretion over financial and other matters limited and, in Scotland at least, a question mark put over their entire structure.

In the circumstances it is surprising and encouraging to be able to report that, in some important respects, the system of local government in Scotland is healthy and buoyant. A record number of candidates was willing to be nominated in 1988; the proportion of wards contested was at its highest since reorganisation in 1974 and so more electors than ever before had a choice of candidates; not only did more electors have a choice, their range of choice was also greater with major parties contesting almost three quarters of the seats. In addition, the number of women candidates and councillors continued to increase and turnout showed a modest rise. The inexorable advance of partisan politics is a more controversial 'gain', but its beneficial side effects are obvious. It has increased electoral competition in many areas and has, as a consequence, increased responsibility and accountability in a number of districts because, when electors have to give a verdict on a council's stewardship over the previous four years they can reward or punish the party that has administered the affairs of the district.

For good or ill local election results are scrutinised for what they might reveal about the electoral standing of the parties. The overall figures show that, despite the Conservative reorganisation of their machinery, their largest ever number of candidates and a formidable rhetorical counter-attack attempting to explain the advantages of Thatcherism for Scotland, their support continued to decline and they fell into third place in the popular vote. Labour, which dominates parliamentary and local politics in Scotland did not lapse into complacency; it fought and won a record number of seats and its share of the vote remained at the high point attained in the 1987 general election. The SNP, which fielded its highest ever number of candidates, made more progress than any other of the main parties; its share of the vote, which put it ahead of the Conservatives for the first time, was its highest since 1977, although this fell some way short of the figures obtained then. It still controls only one district council, but of most potential significance perhaps, was the relatively good, but patchy performance of the SNP in Labour's heartland, the central belt. It has been there before, of course, and not sustained its gains, and there is nothing about the current political climate which suggests that long-term change beneficial to the SNP is in prospect though we can expect its momentum to continue for some time as we have seen in earlier periods. Given the handicaps that it faced the new SLD fought a commendable number of seats; its share of the vote (compared with the Alliance share in 1984) fell quite sharply, but it ended up with the largest number of seats won by the Liberals or the Alliance since reorganisation and added Gordon to North East Fife as districts that it controlled.

It is always difficult for an observer to determine with any confidence what the main issues are in an election or to divine what the electors are 'trying to say' when they vote. There is little agreement amongst the parties during the campaign about what they regard as the main issues, and their interpretations of the electors' verdict are perhaps even more varied. If, as we suggested earlier, these elections were some kind of judgement on the poll tax, then this innovation was overwhelmingly rejected. Equally, if they were an opportunity to show approval of Thatcherism as promoted by a newly aggressive Conservative party in Scotland, then the approval was clearly not given. The poll tax was indubitably an issue and an appropriate one, but local elections are, above all and properly so, an opportunity for electors to pass judgement on the way that their districts have been run over the last four years. If this is indeed the case, then the results of the 1983 district elections can be read as a generous endorsement of the performance of the great majority of Labour councils. Labour's vote held up well, it won more seats than ever before, and has a majority in twenty-four of the thirty-four partisan districts in Scotland.

Probably no single interpretation of the results is correct, but it is probably not unfair to assess them as a muted, but pretty emphatic vote of confidence in our system of local government and in the people who run it.
