Introduction

This may well be the last round of local elections under the present structure of Scottish local government. The Conservative government has announced a review of the system and, whilst it is too early to be sure that Regional Elections will not take place in 1994, it is very likely that the District elections of 1992 will be the last in the present series. Whatever changes might take place we hope to continue our collection and analysis of the results.

There were no changes in boundaries of any electoral significance for this round of elections, so the results are directly comparable with those for 1988.

In order to keep printing costs down we have, this time, omitted our appendices on the composition of Regional electoral divisions, the composition of Westminster and European constituencies and the classification of Districts. These remain as they were before. The details are contained in earlier volumes, but if new readers wish to have a copy of these appendices they may obtain one from Election Studies at the cost of photocopying and postage.

As usual this volume is organised in four sections viz. the Introduction; a Commentary on the results and an analysis of trends; detailed results are given for all Districts; and finally we produce Summary Tables and appendices.

Women candidates are identified by the prefix Ms and the following additional symbols are used:

- = Retiring councillor elected in 1988
- * Retiring councillor elected at a by-election since May 1988
- + Retiring councillor who has changed parties since May 1988
- Retiring councillor who has changed wards since May 1988

The abbreviations used to indicate party or group affiliations are as follows:

COMM	Communist
CPGB	Communist Party of Great Britain
DL	Democratic Left
INDCON	Independent Conservative
INDLAB	Independent Labour
INDNAT	Independent Nationalist
LIB	Liberal
MOD	Moderate
PPP	People Pension Power
RA	Residents' Association
SML	Scottish Militant Labour
SOC	Socialist
TA	Tenants' Association

We wish to thank the Returning Officers who sent us the results and Dr Terry Burke of the University of Dundee for his invaluable help with computing.

TRENDS IN DISTRICT ELECTIONS

The Scottish district elections held in May 1992 took place in an unusual political atmosphere. Just a month before, in April, the general election had produced a major upset in Scotland. In the light of the apparent decline in Conservative support in Scotland since the previous general election, and on the basis of opinion polls during the general election campaign, many commentators had confidently expected and predicted that the Conservatives would lose further ground and that Labour and the SNP would make gains. In the event, as table A shows, Scotland did not become a 'Tory-free' zone, as some had predicted. On the contrary, the Conservatives increased their share of the vote as compared with 1987 (+1.7%) while Labour declined by 3.4 points; the Liberal Democrats' share fell sharply and, although the SNP advanced to 21.5%, this was not as good a performance as had been predicted and was not enough to give the SNP any more seats. The only seat to change hands compared with 1987 (Aberdeen South) was taken by the Conservatives from Labour.

Table A: The general election result in Scotland

	Share of Votes (%)		Seats Won
	1987	1992	1987	1992
Con	24.0	25.7	10	11
Lab	42.4	39.0	50	49
Lib Dem	19.2	13.1	9	9
SNP	14.0	21.5	3	3

Note: Columns do not total 100 because votes for 'Others' are not shown.

The surprise of these results was not only that the Conservatives did better and Labour and the SNP worse than expected, but that Scottish voters moved in a different direction from voters in the rest of Britain. Since 1959 Scotland had deviated steadily and increasingly away from the Conservatives relative to the rest of the country. But in 1992 there was a swing of 2.6% from Labour to the Conservatives in Scotland while in England and Wales there was a swing of the same size to Labour. As a result Labour entered the local elections in something resembling a state of shock. The setback in Scotland, together with the failure to push the Tories out of office, was a severe disappointment and Labour voters and party workers were still shattered and demoralised by the time the local elections came round. Much the same could be said of the SNP. The Conservatives, in contrast, were cock-a-hoop at having confounded the prophets of doom and must have relished the prospect of demonstrating that their general election recovery was not a mere flash in the pan. It is more difficult to assess the post-election mood of the Liberal Democrats. Although they lost the seat they had gained in a by-election (Kincardine and Deeside) and their overall share of the vote slumped, they performed quite well in most constituencies where they were already strong and held on to the nine of the seventy-two Scottish seats that they had held in 1987.

Before considering the performances of the parties in the district elections, we follow the pattern established in our previous reports by examining trends in candidacies and contests, party competition and turnout.

Candidates and Contests

Table B shows the number of candidates put forward by the parties at district elections since 1974, when the current system of local government was established. The steady upward trend in the number of candidates was continued in 1992 when a new record of 3,180 people stood for election. We doubt whether it is the attraction of local office which accounts for this trend. Rather, we would suggest that the increasing presence of parties in local government means that more people are willing to 'fly the flag' for their party in wards where they have little chance of winning. Local parties are encouraged by their national headquarters to contest elections in order to keep their organisation active and up to scratch. It is the number of party candidates that has increased over the years, not Independents or others.

Table B: Candidates in district elections 1974-92

	1974	1977	1980	1984	1988	1992

Others	207	187	122	122	159	126
Total	2560	2571	2452	2835	3130	3180

Note: In this and subsequent tables we use 'Lib Dem etc' as a shorthand way of referring to the series of party names used by what may loosely be described as the centre - Liberal, Alliance, SLD and Liberal Democrat.

Between 1988 and 1992 there were declines in the number of Conservative, Labour and Other candidates but this was more than compensated for by increases in Liberal Democrat and SNP candidates. The SNP fielded a record number and had more candidates than any other party. They recorded particularly large increases in Grampian (+26) and Highland (+12).

Table C: Women candidates and councillors in district elections 1974-92

	1974	1977	1980	1984	1988	1992
% of candidates	14.4	16.3	17.8	21.6	23.5	26.7
% of councillors	12.9	14.1	14.3	17.1	19.6	21.5

Another clear trend among candidates is the rising proportion of women (table C). In the 1992 election more than a quarter of all candidates were women, the largest proportion in district elections to date. In party terms, the proportion of women was highest in the Green party (42.9%), followed by the Liberal Democrats (35.7%), the Conservatives (30.5%), the SNP (26.1%) and Labour (22.9%). Table C also shows the percentage of women among those who were elected and this is consistently lower than the percentage of candidates. This is partly because more women are candidates for the less successful parties, but it is also true that women appear to fight less promising seats than men whatever the party they represent (see summary table 7).

One direct consequence of the increased number of candidates in 1992 was a small increase in the proportion of wards which were contested. Over the country as a whole 86.9% of wards were contested, another all-time high for district elections. In table D we show the trend in contested elections in three categories of districts. This is a categorisation which we have developed in previous election reports and no districts have moved between categories as a result of the 1992 elections. There remain ten non-partisan districts - Caithness, Sutherland, Ross and Cromarty, Skye and Lochalsh, Badenoch and Strathspey, Nairn, Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale, Wigtown, and Stewartby. Nine districts have a 'mixed' form of local politics - Lochaber, Inverness, Moray, Banff and Buchan, Gordon, Kincardine and Deeside, Roxburgh, Argyll and Bute, and Annandale and Eskdale. In the remaining 34 districts partisan politics predominates.

	1974 %	1977 %	1980 %	1984 %	1988 %	1992 %
Partisan districts	86.3	88.0	88.3	91.3	95.9	94.6
Mixed districts	64.3	51.9	43.6	52.2	73.3	73.2
Non-partisan districts	53.8	36.6	20.7	27.5	40.0	54.4

We have suggested in the past that, for a variety of reasons, the existence of party competition minimises uncontested elections and this is clearly demonstrated by the data. In 1992 the proportion of wards contested stabilised at around 95% and 73% respectively in partisan and mixed districts. While there was a significant increase in non-partisan areas, still just over half of wards were contested. The increase is largely a product of the increased presence of the SNP in these areas (up from 25 candidates in 1988 to 38 in 1992), although there was also an increase in Independent candidates (from 150 to 162).

Patterns of Party Competition

The precise nature of electoral contests varies a good deal from ward to ward. They can be assigned to one of four major types, however, and table E shows how the frequency of these different sorts of contest (or non-contest) has changed over the years.

Table E: Patterns of competition in district wards 1974-92

	1974 %	1977 %	1980 %	1984 %	1988 %	1992 %

Major party v Ind/Other	13	11	9	9	9	8
Major party contest	56	59	61	65	74	75
Major party uncontested	9	8	9	9	5	6

The most significant long-term change is the increase in major party contests, which again rose slightly in 1992 and occurred in three-quarters of all wards. Three factors account for this - the increased willingness of the Conservatives to fight local elections in Scotland, the enormous increase over the years in the numbers of SNP and centre party candidates and the fact that, for a variety of reasons, all parties have steadily encroached upon formerly non-partisan areas.

Table F compares the distribution of different types of contest in the three different sorts of districts in 1992. As in 1988, more than 90% of wards in partisan districts had party contests. In mixed districts party contests were up to 42%, compared with 31% last time, while in non-partisan districts they rose from 7% to 11%.

Party contests can be broken down further into various categories and this is done in table G, which shows how the pattern of party competition at local level in Scotland has changed since 1974. The table illustrates well the complexity of party competition at local level in Scotland. Whereas straightforward Labour versus Conservative contests were once the most common form of election contest they have now all but disappeared. Labour versus SNP is now by far the most common form of straight fight. But three-way fights are the most common type of contest (40%) while almost a quarter (23%) of contests involved all four major parties in 1992, as in 1988. The slight increases in 1992 in forms of two-way and three-way contest other than those specified in the table is further evidence of increasing complexity.

Turnout

If parties and candidates, on the whole, showed more interest in the 1992 district elections than ever before the same cannot be said of the electorate. Turnout in contested wards dropped sharply to its lowest level since local government reorganisation. The turnout figures for each set of elections since 1974 are given in table H.

Table H: Turnout in contested wards 1974-92

	1974	1977	1980	1984	1988	1992
% Turnout	51.4	47.8	45.7	44.4	45.5	41.4

Only two partisan districts exceeded a 50% turnout in 1992 - Stirling (54.7%) and Bearsden & Milngavie (53.6%). These were also the two districts with the highest turnout in 1988. Seventeen of the 53 districts, on the other hand, failed to reach a 40% turnout. Turnout declined in every region but the fall was steepest in Strathclyde (-8.8%) and Fife (-8.5%). These are, of course, strongly Labour areas and the suspicion must be that it was Labour supporters who failed to vote in their usual numbers. This suspicion is reinforced by examining turnout changes in districts. Four districts actually had a higher turnout than in 1988, but all were small, non-partisan districts - Sutherland, Badenoch and Strathspey, Wigtown, and Stewartby (the latter two being in the Galloway and Upper Nithsdale constituency, which had had a very high turnout in the general election and had unexpectedly returned the incumbent Conservative Secretary of State for Scotland, Ian Lang). On the other hand, the biggest declines in turnout were in the following districts.

Hamilton	-11.9%	Glasgow	-9.8%
Monklands	-10.8%	Dunfermline	-9.8%
Dundee	-10.5%	Kirkcaldy	-9.7%
Inverclyde	-10.0%	Cunningham	-9.7%
Cumnock & Doon Valley	-9.9%	East Kilbride	-9.5%

All of these are strongly Labour districts. If these sorts of districts are compared with areas where Labour is much weaker then the point is even more clearly made. Thus Eastwood, the Tory stronghold in Strathclyde, declined by only 1.2%; the decline in North East Fife (-5.0%) was about half the size of the decline in the other Fife districts. Dundee's turnout fall was nearly double that of the other Tayside districts and the same is true of Aberdeen compared to other Grampian districts. Taking the 34 partisan districts as units of analysis, there was a strong correlation between the change in turnout and the Conservative share of the vote in 1988 (+.655) and an even stronger negative correlation with Labour share of the vote (-.673).

Labour voters and/or party workers seem to have suffered from campaign fatigue and a sense of disillusion, having just fought and 'lost' a general election. It is likely, however, that all voters were rather fed up with electioneering since the 'phony' general election campaign and continuous speculation about the date of the election had been going on for at least five months. Turnout declined in the district elections because many voters, and at least some party workers too, were simply weary of it all.

Party Support

Voting Trends

The distribution of votes among the parties at district elections since 1974 is shown in table I. These are the 'raw' figures which take no account of changes in the number of candidates put forward by the parties from election to election.

Table I: Party shares of the vote in district elections 1974-92

	1974 %	1977 %	1980 %	1984 %	1988 %	1992 %
Con	26.8	27.2	24.1	21.4	19.4	23.2
Lab	38.4	31.6	45.4	45.7	42.6	34.1
Lib Dem etc.	5.0	4.0	6.2	12.8	8.4	9.5
SNP	12.4	24.2	15.5	11.7	21.3	24.3
Ind	14.1	9.8	6.7	6.8	6.4	7.4
Other	3.4	3.3	2.2	1.6	2.0	1.9

In 1992 Labour dropped back sharply by 8.5% whereas the Conservatives increased their vote share by 3.8%. Despite the Conservative advance, the modest increase of 3.0% achieved by the SNP was enough to keep them in second place, ahead of the Conservatives in terms of popular support. The Liberal Democrats also recovered a little from their disappointing performance in 1988.

Variations in candidatures are such, however, that these gross figures do not tell us very much about the changing popularity of the parties in Scotland. As a first step in getting a more realistic assessment it is useful to separate out the different district categories. This is done in table J, which shows the pattern of party support over the last three elections in non-partisan, mixed and partisan districts respectively.

Looking first at non-partisan districts, all that need be said is that in 1992 there was a further dip in the share of votes gleaned by Independents, while the Conservatives and the SNP improved their positions a little. Mixed districts seem to have moved further towards a partisan style of local politics as again Independent support declined, the gainers being the Tories and the Liberal Democrats. It is partisan districts that are of most interest here however, since party candidacies are rather more stable in these districts than in the other two kinds of districts. In partisan districts the Labour to Conservative swing was slightly more pronounced than the gross figures suggest (Conservative +4.1%; Labour -8.6%). The Liberal Democrat improvement was very slight indeed (+0.8%) and the SNP were in third place, just behind the Conservatives, with an increase of 3.3%.

Even in partisan districts, however, there were significant changes in the numbers of candidates put forward by the major parties between 1988 and 1992. The number of Labour and Conservative candidates both dropped slightly (by 16) whereas the SNP put forward 56 more candidates than in 1988. In order to estimate changes in party support more accurately we examine the aggregated figures from wards in which the pattern of party competition was the same in both 1988 and 1992.

Only three types of contest yield enough wards for the figures to be meaningful and the data for these are presented in table K. Votes for parties and candidates other than those specified are ignored in the calculations. The four-way figures show that, controlling for changes in candidacies, there was indeed a definite improvement in the Conservatives' standing in Scotland between 1988 and 1992. The general election result was clearly not a 'one off' freak. Labour declined substantially and the improvement on the part of the Liberal Democrats was a genuine one. On the other hand most of the increase in SNP support suggested by the raw figures seems to have come from increased numbers of candidates, as the rise in their share in these seats is very modest indeed.

Table J: Party shares of the vote in different types of districts 1984-92

Non-Partisan districts	1984 %	1988 %	1992 %

Ind	3.0	2.2	2.4
Other	1.7	1.6	1.8

In three way contests Labour slumped very badly, but it was the Conservatives who benefitted more than the SNP. This seems bad news for the SNP, since the 1988 figures show that three-way contests tend to be in strong Labour areas, and the SNP might have hoped to benefit from Labour's decline. However, our interpretation is that in its strong areas the Labour vote fell because of poor turnout, not party switching and so the SNP did not pick up as much support as it might have done in other circumstances. Anti-Labour (and probably anti-SNP) voters did turn out and, in the absence of a Liberal Democrat, had no alternative but to vote Conservative so that the increase in the Conservative share in these seats is almost exactly the same as the combined increase in the Conservative and Liberal Democrat share in four-way contests. Clearly, however, there was a net movement from Labour to the SNP in seats contested in both 1988 and 1992 by these two parties only.

Although this kind of analysis of electoral change excludes the effects of varying candidacies it is not without problems. Particular types of contest tend to be found in particular types of area and this influences the results obtained.

In terms of the uncorrected figures for the parties' shares of the vote, all five mainly partisan regions moved in the same directions. Labour lost ground in every one, doing worst of all in Fife (-10.4%) and Lothian (-8.5%); the best Conservative performance (+5.2%) was in Strathclyde and their worst (+0.1%) in Fife. In the latter case the other parties benefitted since Fife gave both the Liberal Democrats (+4.5%) and the SNP (+6.5%) their largest increase in vote share on a regional basis.

Table K: Party shares of the vote in selected types of contests 1988-92

Four-way contests (118)	1988 %	1992 %	Change

Two-way contests (102)
Lab	63.7	54.1	-9.6
SNP	36.3	45.9	+9.6

At the level of individual districts, analysis of changes in party support is bedevilled by changes in the number of candidates of the different parties. Thus, the biggest Conservative increase in vote share was in Clackmannan (+11.7%) but in 1988 there were only two Conservative candidates for 12 seats whereas in 1992 all 12 were contested. Similarly, the biggest SNP increase was in East Lothian but here their candidates increased from 8 to 16 in the 17 seats at stake. It is worth noting, however, that Labour lost more than 10% of its share of the vote in East Lothian (-13.0%), Glasgow (-11.8%), Clydebank (-11.4%), Dunfermline (-11.2%), Clackmannan (-11.0%), Dundee (-10.8%), Aberdeen (-10.3%) and Kilmarnock and Loudoun (-10.3%). All are (or were) very strongly Labour districts and, indeed, there was a significant correlation of -.380 between Labour's share of the vote in a district in 1988 and the change in its share from 1988 to 1992. The stronger Labour was in 1988, the greater was the fall in 1992. There was also a tendency for the SNP vote to rise as Labour's fell. The correlation between the change in the SNP share of the vote and the change in the Labour share was -.582. The biggest SNP increases were in East Lothian (+11.6%) , Dunfermline (+10.9%) Renfrew (+8.8%), Kirkcaldy (+ 8.5% and Kilmarnock and Loudoun (+8.2%).

Seats Won

The ebbs and flows of votes are of intrinsic interest to those who find elections fascinating, but in the real world of politics it might be said that it is winning seats that counts. Table L shows the distribution of seats among the parties at district elections since 1974.

It can be seen that although Labour continues to dominate local government at district level, their near-hegemony was somewhat shaken in 1992. The Conservatives recovered from their nadir of 1988, the SNP came close to their record 1977 performance and the Liberal Democrats now have more seats than ever before.

The wards which changed hands in 1992 are listed in the Appendix and the turnover of seats is shown in table M. Labour's biggest losses were to the SNP (52 seats) and the Conservatives (30) and in return they managed to take only one seat from the Conservatives and 7 from the SNP. Even Independents took more from Labour (10) than they lost to them (3).

Table M: Gains and losses of seats 1988-92

As a result of these gains and losses there was also a good deal of turnover in control of districts. Labour lost its overall majority in Edinburgh, West Lothian, Falkirk, Clydesdale and Kilmarnock and Loudoun to no overall control and Kyle and Carrick to the Conservatives. Paradoxically, Labour gained control of Cumbernauld and Kilsyth and the Conservatives lost Bearsden and Milngavie to no overall control (due to the Liberal Democrats taking a seat from them). While Labour still dominates Scottish local government, controlling most of the authorities with large populations, there is no doubt that Labour's apparent impregnability was severely dented in many cases. Since permanent one-party government is never entirely healthy, the glimmer of light offered to other parties by the 1992 election results is in some ways a welcome development.

Party control of the 53 districts is now as follows:

Majority Labour Control (19)

Aberdeen	Clackmannan	Motherwell
Dundee	Glasgow	Hamilton
Kirkcaldy	Clydebank	East Kilbride

Minor Parties

One of the more esoteric aspects of local elections is the performance of the assorted minor parties, 'one-off' organisations and eccentric or aggrieved individuals who contest them. An analysis of these 'others' is given in summary table 12. By far the biggest group consists of Independent Labour candidates. These are frequently former Labour councillors who have been deselected by their local parties, or had some sort of disagreement, but nonetheless fight on without party backing. In three such cases (two in Glasgow and one in Hamilton) the Labour 'rebels' held their seats against an official Labour candidate. This is an indication, perhaps, that the electorate are not always prepared to be dictated to by an over-arrogant party. The second major grouping consists of the 'Militant' group in Glasgow, two of whom were elected. Perhaps the most remarkable ward result in Scotland, however, was the one in Dunfermline South East in which a candidate of the 'Democratic Left' - the successor of the British Communist party - took a seat from Labour. Given all that has happened around the world, he must have been a very remarkable candidate.

Conclusion

The 1992 district elections were fought under rather unusual circumstances and it is difficult, therefore, to identify with confidence the long-term implications of the results. It seems likely, however, that the greatest influence on the results had little or nothing to do with local government. Labour's defeat in the general election and its set-back in Scotland demoralised supporters and party workers alike and boosted the standing and morale of the Conservatives.

Such was Labour's dominance in Scottish local politics before 1992 that little further advance could have been expected - indeed, any further progress might have had negative implications for local democracy since the major Scottish districts could already be regarded as a series of Labour fiefdoms or mini one-party states. Complacency and arrogance may have set in in some areas and Labour paid an electoral penalty for this.

But the chances are that the changes seen in the 1992 elections had less to do with the performances of local authorities or councillors, or even with the performance of the government, than with the change in Conservative leadership from Mrs. Thatcher to Mr. Major. Mrs Thatcher was extremely unpopular in Scotland and this must have had a deleterious effect on the standing of her party. Mr. Major may not be seen as a very heroic or even very popular figure but his succession may have resulted in the Conservative party in Scotland returning to a more realistic and 'normal' level of support than was the case during the Thatcher years.

Despite all the talk of a breakthrough and evidence of widespread support for constitutional change, the electoral outlook for the SNP remains gloomy. The electoral system penalises the SNP and it is now difficult to see them ever making inroads into Labour heartlands, which they must do if they are to progress further. It seems likely that the SNP will act as a sort of pressure group on behalf of Scotland and of devolution rather than a political party with a realistic hope of achieving its aim of independence.

There is one thing that we can be reasonably certain about, however. The 1992 district elections are likely to be the last held under the present local government system. It is unclear exactly when and how the system will be changed but our guess would be that the successor system, will involve weaker local authorities, fewer people being involved as councillors and, along with other legislation, will result in a further weakening of local democracy.
